Indeed, the Legion team - which draws from Scituate and Cohasset - has been getting some sterling efforts on the mound from the likes of Greg Malley, Teddie Straughn and Mark Rennie.

"We're starting to come around with the bats a little bit. We still need to make some progress, but that will come."
Legion coach Mike O'Brien

Shane Caffery has also pitched well out of the bullpen, and Greg Oullette tossed a complete game 7-2 victory over Holbrook in the first week of the season.

So why is the team 2-5-1 after Monday night's 9-1 loss to Quincy? It has been a lack of hitting, specifically in clutch situations with runners on base.

"That has been the story for us since our first loss [12-2 against Milton]," O'Brien said Tuesday. "After that game, we have played some unbelievable defense and gotten some great pitching."

Leading the effort defensively have been third baseman Kevin Signorelli, shortstop Scott Carroll, center fielder Garrett Callahan and catcher Terrence O'Brien. O'Brien has been especially impressive, throwing out six runners on the base paths so far this season.

Coach O'Brien says his offense may have turned the corner in Sunday's 4-1 victory over Parkway (from West Roxbury). Terrence O'Brien went 3-for-4 in that game, and Ryan Ferriter came up with two huge plays at the plate. One was a sacrifice bunt to move a couple runners along in the fourth, and then in the sixth, Ferriter hit a two-run double to break the game open.

That was more than enough for Malley, who went the first six innings and allowed only three hits. Rennie closed it out with a 1-2-3 seventh, including a couple punchouts.

Coach O'Brien was glad to see a pitcher's strong performance backed up by his offense, something that had been lacking in the first six games. Cohasset's tie came against Morrissette, a game in which the Boston College-bound Straughn pitched lights out. The recent CHS grad struck out 11 batters in seven innings, at which point the game was called due to rain.

Straughn also pitched well in last Friday's 5-4 loss at Stoughton. Rennie, a southpaw, tossed a game of his own last Monday against Braintree, but it was wasted in a 2-0 loss.

Coach O'Brien is confident, however, that his team will turn things around, as there is plenty of time to right the ship and qualify for the Zone 6 playoffs.

"We are very deep; we've got a team with a tremendous amount of talent," O'Brien said. "We're starting to come around with the bats a little bit. We still need to make some progress, but that will come."

Skippers softball looks to build on this year's success

By Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

Midway through the softball season the Lady Skippers looked at each other in disbelief.

They had plummeted to a dismal 4-9 record, and the outlook appeared mighty bleak.

Who would have dreamt the Lady Skippers could roar back with seven straight victories? Yes, they are the Comeback Kids of Cohasset.

In a nutshell, the team started off with an average "win some lose some record," then sank into a slump. After a crude wake-up call, things started clicking for the Skippers.

In this roller coaster ride of a season, they hit rock bottom against next door neighbor Norwell. The game turned into THE tipping point in the Cohasset schedule. The Lady Skippers beat the Clippers in their first showdown but not this second time around.

The 6-3 loss really bothered veteran coach Deb Bostwick and her players.

"This loss snapped us back into reality," said Bostwick. "Norwell showed us that any team can win on any given day. We needed this wake-up call."

After this bummer of a game, the Skippers boarded the "W" train and rode it all the way to the tourney. What gave the girls a new wind?

"It was definitely a confidence thing," said junior Melissa Crowley-Buck. "First, our hitting clicked. Then our defense kicked in. Before we knew it, we were on a winning streak. One win built confidence and snowballed into another victory."

Next step: state tournament

Cohasset freshman Brian Hill, shown here covering the plate in a game against Holbrook, won four games this year and figures to be a top-of-the-rotation starter next season.

7-11, 7-10, 8-10.

Since Al Gallotta took over the Cohasset High baseball program three years ago, those have been his team's records. Slight and steady improvement each year, leading up to '05, where the Skippers were one win shy of qualifying for the state tournament.

That is the goal for next season, and Gallotta says the team may have the horses to do it.

"I'm as optimistic as I think I've been since I got here, in terms of where we are talent-wise," said the Skippers coach. "The kids we're working with now are improving each year, and I think when we jell together a little bit more, we'll be that much better."

One reason for that optimism is the success of the junior varsity team, coached by Bob Rodgers, who lost only one game this season. There are also seven athletes - who just completed their freshman season at CHS - who are playing AAU baseball this summer.

Gallotta says that is the most "out of season commitment to the sport" he has seen in his time at Cohasset.

Make no mistake about it, the boys returning to next year's team have a few holes to fill. Six seniors have graduated from this year's team, including their 2-3-4 hitters: Tim Pilczak, Teddie Straughn and Luis Blanco.

Batting cleanup and playing catcher, Blanco put up some remarkable numbers this year, batting .429 and knocking in 18 runs. In 18 games, he hit 10 doubles; which, as Gallotta points out, pro-rates to 90 over the course of a Major League season.

Perhaps most impressively, Blanco struck out only three times in 63 plate appearances.

Pilczak, meanwhile, played a strong second base and hit .397 from the two-spot in the lineup. He led the team with 25 RBI, which included two separate 6-RBI games. Pilczak led the team with three homers and was second with nine extra-base hits.

Straughn did his best work on the mound, striking out 44 batters in 28.1 innings. His won-loss record did not match those numbers, but Straughn generally pitched against the toughest opponents. Perhaps his best performance came in a tough luck 2-1 extra-inning loss to defending sectional champion Hull in May.

"He is a tremendous role model for the younger kids, and he certainly has good ability as a pitcher," Gallotta said of Straughn. "I think the kids looked up to him; we will definitely miss his leadership."

Gallotta also thinks highly of his other three seniors: Jim DeGiacomo, Andrew Lovallo and John DeWaal. Lovallo, a left fielder, was the only one of the three to see significant playing time, but the coach says that does not lessen their impact on the team.

"Those three kids were tremendous kids who understood their roles, and never

MIAA: Cohasset, Holbrook fix game

By Robert Slager
RSLAGER@CNC.COM

The Holbrook High varsity softball team intentionally tried to lose a late-season game to Cohasset, prompting a state athletic association inquiry that lead to a one-game suspension of coaches from both teams.

According to Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association spokesman Paul Wetzel, Holbrook agreed to intentionally lose a May 24 home game by walking the first four Cohasset batters — forcing home a run — then ordering the rest of the Holbrook players to intentionally strike out for the remainder of the game. Cohasset agreed to do the same. Cohasset earned the win, 1-0, however the game was ultimately overturned.

"Apparently the weather was kind of bad and the game wasn't called off by the umpires," Wetzel said. "The coaches then made a deal. This game should never have been played. It violated the spirit of high school athletics."

Holbrook Junior/Senior High Principal Joel Antolini and Cohasset Athletic Director Ron Ford, in a prepared statement, said the communities regretted the decision.

"The Holbrook and Cohasset school communities regret the collective judgment of three coaches, two umpires and one athletic director involved in a May 24, 2005 softball game in Holbrook that had a predetermined outcome, compromised the character of these teams, the ideals or interscholastic athletes and mission of the schools," the statement read. "The contest has been authentically replayed and both schools took appropriate steps to insure this will not happen again."

The game was replayed a few days later, and Cohasset won, 12-4.

When contacted by phone, Holbrook softball co-coach Susan Fontecchio said, "As far as I'm concerned, the team played two official games against Cohasset."

She would not acknowledge the game played on May 24 and said she had no comment regarding her suspension.

Neither Antolini, who is leaving Holbrook to become Cohasset High principal, nor Fontecchio would explain the motivation for Holbrook's decision. A source close to the team, however, speculated that weather conditions and the need to play another official game may have been factors.

"So many games had been rained out that both teams needed to make sure they got this game in," the source said. "The MIAA doesn't allow you to forfeit a game near the end of the season. If you do, you'll be prohibited from playing in the tournament for two years. It was pouring that day. But unless the game was played , both teams risked being banned from the playoffs."

Ironically, Holbrook and Cohasset earned a spots in the Division 3 South Shore softball tournament. Both teams lost in the first round.

An upward trend

Crowley-Buck also credited the captains and her coach for keeping up the team morale.

The Skippers pushed on. With one game to spare, Cohasset nudged their way into postseason play. Though the third year team members didn't make much noise in the playoffs, they silenced anyone who thought Cohasset couldn't play ball.

This past Monday, the Comeback Kids celebrated their impressive season with a very upbeat year-end banquet. Players received the following recognition from their coach:

co-MVPs: Casey Anderson and Christina Pinkus; Offensive Player Award: Virginia Spofford; Defensive Player Award: Anna Haggerty; Most Improved Player Award: Erin Liddell; Sportsmanship Award: Cecelia Chapman.

The audience also congratulated Anderson and Pinkus for their selection onto the South Shore League All-Star Team.

The future looks promising for the Lady Skippers. Most importantly, Bostwick indicated her interest in coaching again next year. When asked about her plans, Bostwick commented, "I plan on focusing on the defense and building the best fielding team and working from there."

Anderson, who recently graduated from Cohasset High School, expressed optimism about next year.

"We should have no problem filling in the seniors' positions," she said. "Haggerty has shown a lot of promise at the catcher position. Kenzie Durkin and Emily Nash will be solid I the outfield."

Bostwick added, "I'm extremely proud of this year's team for their dedication, hard work, and desire to win," she said. "They really turned this program around. Good hitting should fall into place with confidence."

She suspects Abington and Hull will prove the biggest challenges next season. Yet, she wouldn't be shocked if Norwell, Harwich or Carver rises to the top as well.

What about Cohasset?

"I feel we can do just as well as we did this season if not better," Bostwick said. "It will be up to the team members."

Leading the team will be captains Erin Liddell, Katie James and Melissa Crowley-Buck.

Two seasons ago, Cohasset finished the season with a 5-15 record. In 2005, they ended up 11-10. Let's hope the trend line continues.

Next step: state tournament

complained about their roles," Gallotta said. "I really enjoyed having them on the team."

Back on the subject of next year, two reasons Gallotta has high hopes are pitchers Chris Bryan and Brian Hill, both of whom came into this season with little mound experience at the varsity level. Bryan, one of three senior captains on next year's team, won three games and had a team-best 3.53 ERA. He also batted .368, third best on the Skippers roster.

Hill was impressive on the mound in his freshman campaign, winning a team-high four games and posting a 4.82 ERA. At this point in time, Gallotta envisions Bryan and Hill as his 1-2 punch at the top of the rotation next year, but there are also a couple talented hurlers coming up from the JV program.

Joining Bryan as co-captains for 2006 are classmates Brian Straughn and Chris Ofthsun. Straughn batted .304 this year and played a solid first base, while Ofthsun excelled defensively in center field. Gallotta says Ofthsun needs to improve his hitting, but added that he led the team in walks and still had a good on base percentage this season.

The other returnees from this year's varsity squad are Nick Zappolo, Stefan Parnell, Brendan Barrett and Will Pinkus. Zappolo showed a lot of improvement over the course of the year at shortstop, while Parnell (right fielder) and Barrett (designated hitter) contributed offensively throughout the year.

YOUTH LACROSSE REPORT

Girls end season with successful Jamboree weekend

Editor's Note: Due to space constraints, we could not run the 13-and-Under report this week. It will run, in its entirety, in next week's edition.

It was Jamboree weekend for the Cohasset's girls program playing at Bridgewater State College, with Blue and White teams at the oldest levels combining for a weekend filled with games on both Saturday and Sunday.

For the first time ever, Cohasset's youngest girls – the 11-and-Unders – also made an appearance at the Jamboree, playing three games, more than they had played all spring, on Sunday.

The action was particularly exciting for the 15-and-Under girls, whose last two games of the season pitted them against Braintree and Duxbury 3, the only two teams to beat Cohasset's seventh and eighth grade teams in the last two years.

All of the teams ended the year playing some of their best lacrosse. Here are the results:

15-and-Under girls (grades 7-8)

Cohasset's oldest girls played sluggishly most of the day on Saturday, and it cost them at the beginning of the day in a contest against Hull. After jumping to a 2-1 halftime lead on the strength of goals by Maura Barnes and Gabriella Flibotte, the team scored just two more in the second half – from Flibotte and Madeline Leahy – and allowed Hull to tie things up just before the final whistle blew. Maddy Altholtz played a particularly strong game, creating multiple scoring opportunities, but she and the rest of the Cohasset team struggled to convert.

The same thing happened during the day's second game, where Martha's Vineyard kept things close on the strength of amazing goalie play. This time, however, that was not enough to deny Cohasset, as Flibotte scored twice – once assisted by Altholtz – and Katie Gaumer, Madeline Leahy and Hannah Burgess added second-half goals to salt away a 5-1 win.

The final game on Saturday put Cohasset against Sandwich, in a rematch of an early-season blow-out. Sandwich was more scrappy and physical this go-round, but Cohasset still had the upper hand. Flibotte, Amy Meikleham and Kaley Madge each scored twice, with Burgess, Gaumer, Kayla Farren and Maura Barnes adding one goal each. Barnes also picked up an assist, as Cohasset rolled 10-4.

Over the course of the day, Thomson Jaffe made six saves in the Cohasset net.

On Sunday, the Cohasset team that has overwhelmed opponents all year showed up, and put on an awesome display of finesse, toughness and firepower.

The day opened with a 9-0 whitewash of Foxboro, with Gabriella Flibotte scoring a natural hat trick to open the game. From there, the rout was on. Caitlin Mahoney scored twice, Kaley Madge and Maura Barnes each picked up a goal and an assist. Madeline Leahy and Lindsay Hill had solo scores.

But the highlight of the game for Cohasset was an appearance by Alexandra Graven, who played in the youth girl's program four years ago – during the first season — before returning to her native Denmark, where there is no youth lacrosse and she is considered too young to play with the regional adult team that she tried out for and made. Graven was in town visiting for the weekend, and got some playing time in the day's first two games. The "best youth player in all of Denmark" responded during her first shift with an assist on Leahy's goal, and missed several other scoring opportunities.

The team's last two games on Sunday were something the team had pointed to ever since the Jamboree schedule was posted.

Entering the Jamboree, the Cohasset 15-U girls had compiled a record of 27-2-2 over the last two seasons, and the season was ending with a chance to avenge the only defeats the eighth graders had suffered.

Braintree – which defeated Cohasset at last year's Jamboree — was light on players, but the game was a dogfight because Cohasset moved several top players to the other side. After trailing 3-1 early, Cohasset rallied to tie the score at 3 by halftime, then salted it away with a 4-1 second half.

Flibotte, Barnes and Isabelle Franklin each scored twice, with Hannah Burgess scoring a single goal and Kaley Madge and Lindsay Allard adding assists. All but one of Thomson Jaffe's five saves in the net came during the second half, shutting the door on Braintree.

That set up a final showdown against Duxbury 3, the only team to beat the oldest Cohasset girls this year.

In a game that gave a hint of what might become an annual ritual between two of Eastern Massachusetts' best programs, Cohasset managed a 1-0 halftime lead on the strength of a Flibotte penalty shot. Madge fed Barnes on a brilliant fastbreak to open the second half, Allard scored next and Flibotte banged home a second free position to give Cohasset a 4-0 lead just moments into the second half.

From there, the team settled in on defense, getting strong contributions from Megan Richardson, Mimi Mahoney, Lauren Blaze, Natalie Hunt and Lindsey Hill. Thomson Jaffe stopped five shots, several down the stretch, to preserve an intense win that sent Cohasset into shrieks and holler that were heard across the entire Bridgewater site.

11-and-Under girls (grades 3 and 4)

Cohasset's youngest girls played three games on Sunday, and showed steady improvement throughout the day against some tough competition.

The day started against a South Boston team that was shorthanded, so Cohasset allowed them to use some older players to fill the voids in the roster. Even with the age disparity, Cohasset hung tough in a 6-2 loss. Kate Bodner and Victoria Bryan scored Cohasset's goals and were all over the field scooping ground balls and playing great defense.

The second game was against Whitman-Hanson-Abington, and Cohasset started slowly before coming on strong as the game progressed. Cohasset overcame a 2-0 deficit on the strength of goals from Isabella Flibotte and Peyton MacNaught. Gabrielle Weisman helped Cohasset control the midfield by scooping several ground balls and moving the ball into the offensive zone. Molly Fitzgerald and Isabelle Dunne played well on defense and disrupted several WHA passes, but they could not help Cohasset keep up the momentum and WHA pulled out to a 6-2 win.

The final game of the day was a rematch against Duxbury, which had beaten Cohasset 10-2 a week earlier. The game was much different, with Katie McKenna winning the opening draw and driving to the cage before a crease violation was called. Cohasset continued to play very well throughout the game, but could not capitalize on some great scoring opportunities until Kate Bodner scored her second goal of the day. Isabella Flibotte moved to defense for this game and was outstanding on ground balls and clearing. Maddie Curley played goalie in all three games and turned away several good scoring chances and made solid clearing passes. After Cohasset had a goal called back for another crease violation, Duxbury was able to hang on for a 4-1 win.

The 11-and-Under girls showed great enthusiasm and teamwork throughout the season. The girls learned the fundamentals of the game and improved every week.

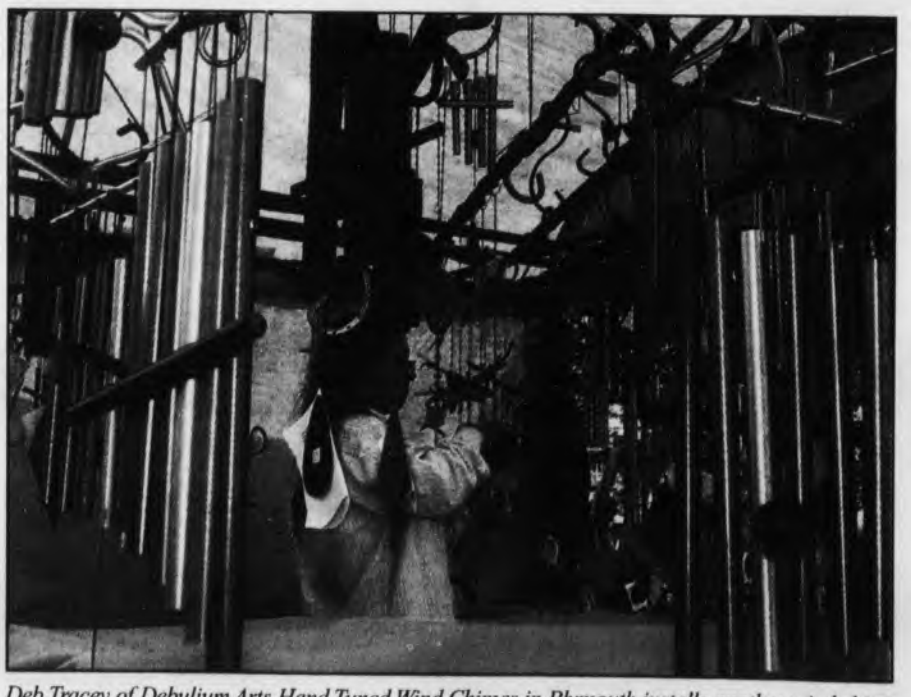
Adam Dramin of Weymouth checks out the artwork in the juried exhibition tent at the 50th annual South Shore Arts Festival on the Common over the weekend.

A feast for the senses

50th Arts Festival is fabulous

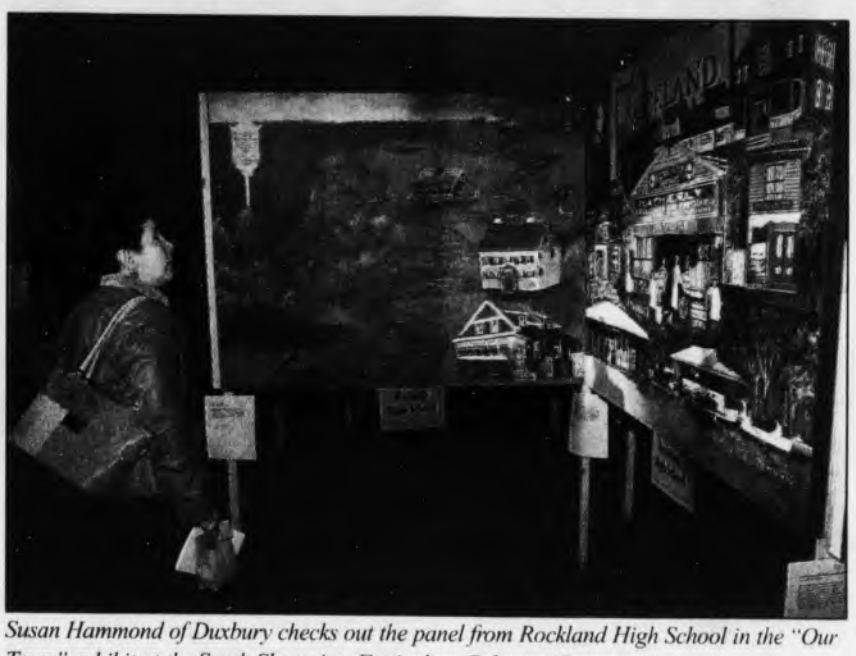


Mary Lengyel of Cohasset tries her hand in being an artist in the KidsTent at the festival.

Cara Foley of Cohasset points out to Morgen Montgomery, also of Cohasset, an interesting detail in Cohasset High's contribution to the "Our Town" installation featuring the works of nearly 200 area high school students.

Amy Nablo, 7, of Hingham has a blast hanging around with her dad, Mike Dunfee, while listening to her brother, Ben Mackall, play with Hingham High's Jazz Ensemble during the festival on Saturday.

Deb Tracey of Debulium Arts Hand Tuned Wind Chimes in Plymouth installs another wind chime in her tent.



The Rev. Gary Ritts, left, offers a helping hand in the kitchen making strawberry shortcakes with Carol Sandblom, center, and Debbie Anderson. The Second Congregational Church hosts the annual Strawberry Festival during the arts festival.

Arthur Perlmutter of the New England Marine Modelers club inspect his mode ship, a North River steam, which carried coal and other cargo along the coast of England in the early 1900s. The NE Marine Modelers has model ships on display at the festival.

Carol Ribaudo of Scituate is reflected in the mirror while talking with some friends in front of Karen Z. Eames' handbags that were for sale during the festival.

Susan Hammond of Duxbury checks out the panel from Rockland High School in the "Our Town" exhibit at the South Shore Arts Festival on Cohasset Common.

Robert Francis saddles the seat of a Windsor chair with a travisher at his tent. Francis was one of dozens of artisans at the festival.

Staff photos/Robin Chan

Noah Goodwin-Rice, 3, of Weymouth, and his sister, Sophie, 6, enjoy some delicious strawberry shortcake while listening to music on the common.

Julia Francesconi, 3, of Milton, gets her face painted by Leah Lundberg, 18, of Hingham inside the KidsTent at the festival.

Art aficionados walk under the "Fly Guy" on their way to the auction at the South Shore Arts Center on Friday evening.

DESTINATIONS

Aboard the Carnival Spirit

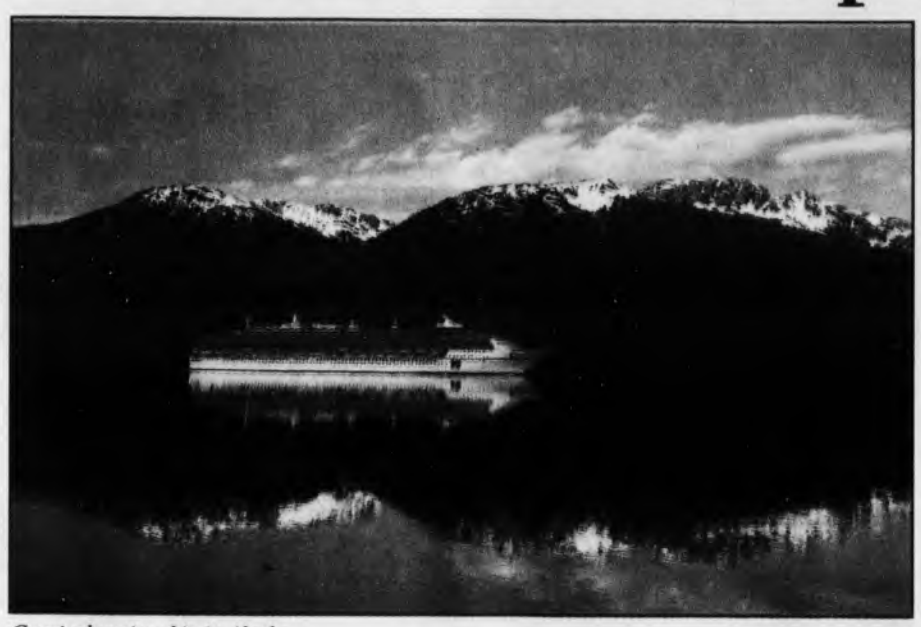
By FRAN GOLDEN

The thing about cruising in Alaska is you have to keep reminding yourself you really are in the U.S. This concept is hard to grasp when you consider it takes more than 10 hours to get to Anchorage from Boston (it's a lot quicker to get to Ireland). It's also hard to grasp when you actually see Alaska, which is nothing if not awe-inspiring.

The scenery is of course beautiful (even flying into the Ted Stevens Anchorage International Airport is scenic, with sunlight glistening off snowcapped peaks). The experience of being in the Last Frontier, enlightening. And there is nothing that I have seen on earth as thunderously impressive as a calving glacier.

In the company of my 21-year-old daughter, I chose this ship and its 7-day Inside Passage itinerary because we wanted to have a "Fun Ship" experience, a good ol' time exploring the 49th State. But Carnival fans be warned: While the 2,124-passenger ship is as big and glitzy as you would expect, the onboard party scene is not as intense in Alaska as in the Caribbean. The crowd is older (mostly age 50 and up) and most people are too exhausted from intense days of touring to stay up much past midnight (the ship's casino is the place that got the most action).

The four-year-old Spirit's decor is everything from early 19th century French to Egyptian, and includes Art Deco and Art Nouveau. At least one passenger found this confusing as we overheard this dialog which cracked us up:



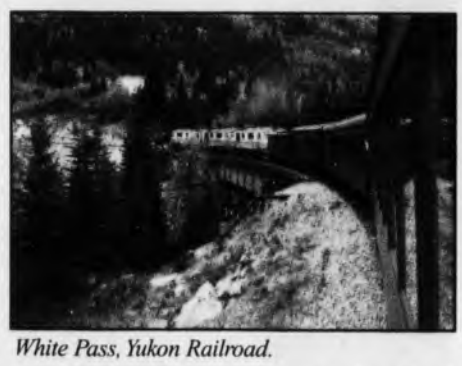
Woman: "Chippendale Library, that sounds good."

Man: "Uh, Chippendale as in the furniture (not the male strippers)."

Women: "Ohhh..."

The Spirit provides comfortable accommodations, surprisingly good cuisine (including fresh Alaskan salmon), plentiful if sometimes cheesy entertainment and a way for you to get what you came all this way to see: Alaska.

We knew we were in the right place when after our first night onboard we awoke to the sound of White Thunder (ice falling off a glacier) at Harvard Glacier at the foot of College Fjord (where all the glaciers are named for East Coast colleges). It was 6:30 a.m. and in the 40s. Since we luckily had a balcony cabin, we threw coats on top of our bathrobes and stood and watched nature's glory. The glacier performed unusually well, calving every few minutes for nearly an hour. The captain of the ship performed well, too, getting us within 1,000 feet of the falling ice and slowly turning the ship 360 degrees so everyone got a picture-perfect view. The ship's mellow-voiced naturalist offered commentary which we cranked up our TV to hear. The ice we were seeing disappear into the fjord was 400 to 500 years old, she said.



Carnival cruise ship in Alaska.

Exiting the fjord, we saw a seal on an ice chunk with a pup she had obviously just given birth to, passed swimming sea otters and saw a bald eagle overhead. Spotting wildlife in Alaska is effortless.

The port of Sitka, our first call, is known for its Russian and Native American history. This is where Russian fur trader Alexander Baranoff established a fort in 1799 and after some intense fighting with the local Tlingit tribe created what would be the capital of Alaska until 1900. The Russian influence remains with St. Michael's Russian Orthodox Church, a resident Russian dance troupe and Russian nesting dolls and amber for sale in the souvenir shops. The Native American influence includes totem polls, including on a one-mile trail at Sitka National Historic Park, plus Native American items in the souvenir shops.

But you can easily get close to nature here, too. While some passengers headed off on small boats on wildlife shore excursions ($109 to $169) — one lucky group spotted a pod of killer whales — and others got close to winged creatures at the Alaska Raptor Rehabilitation Center (visit on a $49 shore excursion or take a cab), Erin and I got our wildlife fix by walking to the free Sheldon Jackson Aquarium. Here five touch tanks allow visitors to pick up and examine slimy local anemones and giant starfish in shades ranging from bright orange to purple. Great fun!

White Pass, Yukon Railroad.

The wildlife on the ship was less enticing. Besides the cute jazz musicians who performed nightly in the Deco Cigar Bar, Erin and I found few guys in the 40s (for me) or 20s (for her) to even flirt with.

Juneau is the only state capital you can't get to by car — you have to come by boat or plane. Arriving here with temps approaching 70, we made a bee-line for nearby Mendenhall Glacier. You can book a shore excursion to see the ice (from $42), but we opted for the Mendenhall Glacier Express, a blue school bus which gets you there for $5 each way.

The bus trip (about a half hour) comes with commentary, ours from a Native American woman who shared the big Juneau news that WalMart is coming to town, which she said was a good thing since K-Mart pulled out a few years ago. She also deadpanned a poop joke: "Why does the bald eagle have a white head? Because the raven flies above."

On her advice, we hiked the 3 1/2-mile East Glacier Loop on a well-maintained trail, mostly through forest, but also with occasional spectacular views of the sun glistening off the glaciers' blue/gray/white ice. We didn't spot any of the bear cubs a ranger warned us were flitting about (if you see one stand still but make a lot of noise) but we met a 30-ish adventure traveler/photographer from Ireland who accompanied us much of the way sharing his tales of world travel. Warning: I hiked in sneakers, and sure felt it in my legs the next day.

Historic Skagway was starting point for the Yukon Gold Rush, and there are late 1800s buildings if you can spot them amidst the Starbucks and tourist shops (get a map at the National Parks Service visitor center to help. At this port we opted for fresh air and exercise, so booked the White Pass Rail & Bike Adventure ($164) which took us on a scenic narrow gauge rail up to Fraser, B.C. (in Canada), population 12, for a sometimes chilly mountain bike ride down from 3,000 feet. Squeezing our handbrakes, we worked a lot less than the crazy stampeders who traversed these rugged parts without benefit of road or rail; there's a reason they call Dead Horse Gulch by that name.

With our day in Ketchikan our goal again was to get out of town. Ketchikan was once a quaint fishing village, but there are now 50 jewelry stores catering to cruise passengers. The Tatoosh Island Sea Kayaking excursions ($134) thankfully took us to a small, island chain, part of the Tongass National Forest, inhabited not by people but by wildlife like the more than a dozen bald eagles we spotted while paddling in two-person crafts.

Throughout our cruise we continued to ooh and ahh, and marvel at how Discovery Channel just doesn't do the trick: You have to experience Alaska in person.

Rates for Carnival's 7-day Alaska cruises between Whittier (Alaska) and Vancouver (B.C.) are from $799 this summer, from $779 in September and from $649 for early bookings next May. For reservations and more information, log on to www.carnival.com

JUNE 23 - JULY 1, 2005

Deep Purple

Deep Purple jams at Music Circus

Roger Glover first joined Deep Purple in 1969 when he was just 24 years old. The bass player and composer will turn 60 in November and is happier than ever to be part of the group once hailed as the world's loudest rock band by the Guinness Book of World Records.

"You don't see what's ahead of you when you're younger. It's really hard work with a lot of gigs and a lot of craziness," explained Glover by telephone from Cleveland last week on a tour that will bring the band to the South Shore Music Circus on Saturday. "When I was a kid in school, I just wanted to have a number one hit. And it actually happened for me. Now, I'm privileged to still be a performer traveling the world. I definitely appreciate my good fortune more now."

With a catalogue that includes "Highway Star," "Black Night," "Hush," "Space Truckin'" and "Smoke on the Water," Deep Purple could easily rely on classic versions of its hits for its tour play list, but Glover says that's never been the case.

"I'm a music fan so I know what hearing 'Smoke on the Water' live means to people. They're just songs, however, not monuments. They're just skeletons that we can play around."

Roger Glover of Deep Purple

"We're lucky to have our classics, but they're new to us every night and it's still a thrill to play them for new audiences. I'm a music fan so I know what hearing 'Smoke on the Water' live means to people. They're just songs, however, not monuments. They're just skeletons that we can play around. I've known since my very first rehearsal with Deep Purple, over 35 years ago, that this group just doesn't do songs. It also jams. The basis of Purple is that we're a jamming group."

And a group with its own real sound, too, not just one created in a recording studio. "There's no artifice about Purple, we play what comes out of our heads. We all play our own instruments--we're not based on image or music videos. We're very traditional in that respect. We live on the road, because we really are a live band," says the Brecon, Wales, native, joined in today's Deep Purple by Don Airey, Ian Gillian, Steve Morse and Ian Paice.

Glover - who spent an 11-year Purple exile (1973-1984) working as a record executive and also playing with Ritchie Blackmore's Rainbow - cites a lack of ego for the enduring success of the group credited with making heavy rock a fine art.

"There are no leaders in the band. If someone tries to be a leader, things just get a little uncomfortable. We've played out our version of a rock 'n roll soap opera over the years, but we're a band again and that's what really counts."

Deep Purple will be at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier Street, Cohasset, on June 25 at 8 p.m. For tickets and information, call 617-931-2787 or visit www.themusiccircus.org.

DON'T BEAT THIS DRUM

The tympanic membrane, or eardrum, is an important part of the hearing mechanism. It separates the outer (external ear) from the middle ear and vibrates with sound or speech. The eardrum is thin and slightly transparent. Its inner layer consists of mucous membrane and its outer layer consists of skin. Needless to say, this delicate structure should be protected from protruding objects, blows to the ear, and loud noises. Should a perforation occur, it is usually treated with antibiotics to take care of any infection. Except for cases involving a chronic ear infection, that is usually the only treatment required. If a perforation does not close within six months, it can be repaired surgically with a tympanoplasty.

Hearing loss is often a result of aging, although it can also be caused (or made worse) by injury, prolonged exposure to loud noise, illness, heredity, and medications. Are you hearing less than you used to? Come meet with a Board Certified Hearing Instrument Specialist at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, and find out why and what you can do about it. We're ready to help here at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Building in Weymouth, with comprehensive evaluations, custom fittings, follow-up support, expert repairs, and compassionate, personalized service. Ph: 781-337-1144. We also have an office in Abington.

P.S. When sound waves strike the eardrum, it vibrates and moves a chain of three small bones on the other side, which transfers the energy of the sound wave from the outer ear through the middle ear and into the inner ear.

Vandals leave mark at middle-high school

Cause thousands of dollars in damage

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Middle-high school students and staff were greeted as they arrived for their last day of school Tuesday by yellow caution tape and a string of police cruisers at the main entrance.

But this time police were not at the scene to handle a potential terrorism threat as was the case in May when a disturbing Columbine-like note was discovered before school.

Vandals struck in the wee hours of Tuesday morning – leaving in their wake smashed windows and several exterior walls spray painted with profanity and obscene illustrations. Shrubs, pulled up from the ground, were strewn around by the entrance to the main office. The golf cart used by the athletic department – that was vandalized with graffiti the week before – was turned upside down in front of the school garage doors.

Police Chief Jim Hussey said the destruction took place at some point after 1 a.m. Tuesday.

There was also graffiti with foul language on walkways, on the school track, and even on Facilities manager Brian Adams said the glass must be specially ordered. The shrubs have been replanted but may not survive the trauma, he said.

Storm brewing over the teachers' contract

Union members may stop volunteer efforts

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Members of the Cohasset Teachers' Association have banded together in their efforts to achieve a fair contract for the next three years. That was evident Thursday (June 23) when roughly 50 members — all wearing red buttons as a sign of their unity — packed the school committee meeting room at the middle-high school for a second time to voice concerns over negotiations.

The current contract between the teachers' union and the school committee will expire Aug. 31; negotiations for a new contract have been underway since September. While, due to the failed override, a reduced fiscal 2006 budget will need to go back to a special Town Meeting for approval — currently, school officials are factoring in a zero percent raises for teachers.

While both sides say they are working toward finding a resolution, if an agreement cannot be reached by September, teachers have plans to take action.

"If our contract is not settled by September, our teachers have met and voted to begin a number of job actions at that time."

— CTA prepared statement

Genevieve Brown, a special education teacher who has been working in Cohasset for the past 36 years and plans to retire at the end of the school year, read a statement on behalf of the Cohasset Teachers' Association during the June 23 school committee meeting.

"If our contract is not settled by September, our teachers have met and voted to begin a number of job actions at that time. One of the job actions has to do with the amount of volunteer time teachers spend on student activities," she said.

Brown quoted the agreement the staff voted on which stated: "A large number of student activities depend almost totally upon the voluntary contributions of time by the staff. This includes such activities as the Camp Marist trip, overnight music department trips, Belize and Costa Rica trips, the Powder Puff game, chaperoning dances, etc. Please be aware that this time will no longer be volunteered."

Brown said middle and high school teachers have volunteered their time to have students act as teacher assistants in their classes, and have worked with students on independent study projects. Elementary school teachers have volunteered their time to attend parent conferences both before and after their school day. Without a new contract by the beginning of the new school year next fall, volunteer activities such as these will not occur, she said.

But it is not just the teachers that are looking for an equitable solution. Brown said school nurses also "deserve a fair economic package."

"Cohasset school nurses have been a bargain for this community for years," she said.

Brown said the teachers acknowledge these are difficult financial times, but said they too have homes, families to raise, and taxes to pay. She said the cost of health insurance will go up $46 per month for teachers, which will be an added burden.

Maintenance, phones, fees eyed to boost bottom line

Bus fees compared with other towns

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh said she feels the only solution for the school's budgetary woes is to cut teaching positions. However, at the will of the school committee, she looked into other potential "discretionary" cuts, as well as possible areas to implement fees. At its direction she considered:

- Cutting $30,000 in one-source cleaning:
- Cutting $10,000 in maintenance:
- Cutting $10,000 in cell phones:
- Restructuring vehicle maintenance
- Implementing bus and parking fees

Walsh said she spoke to facilities manager Brian Adams about cutting funding from the cleaning line item.

"I'm not a believer in telling managers where to cut," she said.

Adams reported there were three areas which could be cut if absolutely necessary, which would make up the $30,000. He said roughly $15,200 could be cut for floor buffing, $9,500 could be cut for windows, which are done once per year, prior to the opening of school, and $5,300 for summer cleaning.

School committee member Rick Flynn said in his view, cutting summer cleaning is not an option because that is when a good portion of the heavy-duty cleaning for the schools gets done. In addition, the custodial staff is working with two less members, and cutting the time the contracted cleaning service adds to the in-house custodians will make matters worse.

"It goes against the agreement we made that we'd keep the buildings clean. They're brand new," he said.

In terms of cutting $10,000 for maintenance, Walsh said that line item originally had $50,000 at the beginning of the budgeting season, and it has been whittled down to $10,000. The town side has money in its budget to help cover school maintenance.

Walsh said the Department of Education requires the schools have some money in the budget for maintenance, and she would like to hold on to the small amount the schools have. Otherwise, "We couldn't make any small purchases or make repairs without going through the town," she said.

Cell phones have been a hot topic during budget discussions as it has been suggested the school department has both unnecessary cell phones being used, and wasteful cell phone plans. Walsh said this year, roughly $20,000 has been spent for phones.

Currently, all bus drivers, all administrators, Adams, and she all have cell phones paid for by the school department. Walsh said moving forward, the cell phone situation will change, and potentially not as many staff members will have phones or plans will change to allow minimal use.

However, she stressed the important roles cell phones play, as during the snowy weather which hit this winter, she was able to get in touch with Adams while he was busy at 4:30 a.m. plowing all three school parking lots. With his phone, he was able to let her know if things would be clear enough to open school on time. In addition, she said the phones were invaluable during the bus accident which happened on the expressway while students were on a field trip. Administrators were able to stay in touch with bus drivers the entire trip up to the scene of the accident.

Vehicle maintenance is an area both Walsh and the school committee would like to investigate further. Walsh said roughly $100,000 was spent on vehicle maintenance this year, and she is "confident we can do better." She would like to put a contract out to bid for a new mechanic, and said she believes the school department can save at least $75,000.

However, Flynn pointed out there is no way to know how much the town could save until the bids for the contract come back in.

Implementing transportation fees is an issue which Walsh said will require some real thought. She said she contacted the superintendents at six neighboring schools to see how they handle their transportation, and asked how much they charged, what their total student enrollment is, the anticipated number of riders or the percentage of total enrolled who will ride, and the anticipated revenue (See chart).

Walsh pointed out, it is one thing to anticipate revenue coming in, and another when the funds actually start coming in. In fact, she said since speaking with Scituate High School, they have found parents are not as enthusiastic as they had anticipated, and only $167,000 has come in.

School committee member Pam Wilson said she doesn't think the school department can safely say it will pay teacher salaries based on money it doesn't have in its possession right now.

"If you were running a business you wouldn't do it," she said.

Wilson said the school department could very well find itself in a position like Scituate is currently in, where anticipated bus revenue isn't generated.

"I'll drive my children before I'll pay $250 to go a half-mile down the road," she said, adding teacher salaries should not be on the backs of the parents.

"The town voted no new taxes. The community doesn't want to pay and this is circumventing that," she said.

Member Adrienne MacCarthy agreed and said anticipated revenue is "not a wise thing to hire personnel on."

How bus fees add up in neighboring towns

Teachers send up red flag over impasse in contract

"Are you aware that the average Cohasset teacher salary is less than Hingham, Duxbury, and Norwell teachers? The differences range from $1,500 to more than $7,000," she said. "Further, each of these towns has negotiated a cost of living increase of between 3 and 4 percent for the 2005-2006 school year.

"With no cost of living money even proposed in the FY06 budget, Cohasset teachers' salaries will fall significantly behind comparable school systems in our local area," Brown said. She pointed out it will be difficult for Cohasset to keep its excellent teaching and nursing staff if it does not provided competitive offers.

This is the second time members of the Cohasset Teachers' Association have come before the school committee to raise concerns. Cohasset middle school language teacher Heidi Olson read a statement on behalf of the CTA at the board's June 9 meeting which noted the accomplishments of Cohasset students, and said those achievements would not be possible "without the skill, dedication, and commitment of the teachers of the Cohasset Public Schools in partnership with the parents and the community."

To retain and attract the kinds of teachers Cohasset has come to expect, Olson said the district needs to offer competitive salaries, and all teachers and nurses need to have the opportunity and financial support to take graduate courses to further their professional growth.

School committee chairman Jamie Williams said she is glad to see the teachers' association feels comfortable enough to raise its concerns with the board. She said just prior to the start of the June 23 meeting, she attended a negotiations session which she felt was "very productive." Williams said negotiations will continue into the summer months.

Other contracts

While the teachers' union is concerned about not having a contract finalized before its expiration Aug. 31, members of the Cohasset Police Department have been working without a contract for one year as of July 1.

During negotiations for last year's budget cycle, Town Manager Bill Griffin said three town unions — the fire, clerical, and library unions — agreed to a two-year contract with a zero percent cost of living increase for fiscal 2005, and a 3 percent cost of living increase for fiscal 2006.

However, the police union did not agree to that same offer and the contract remains unresolved.

"In Massachusetts, police and fire contracts that are at an impasse are referred to the Joint Labor Management Committee (JLMC) for mediation, and sometimes fact finding and arbitration. The JLMC now has jurisdiction over the Cohasset police negotiations, and we are in the process of mediation," he said.

Griffin said in Massachusetts, public unions do not have the right to strike, and the JLMC helps provide a process to resolve negotiations. If mediation does not work, the contract is then referred to an arbitration panel. The panel awards the contract it deems appropriate, and both the union and management (selectmen, town manager, police chief) are bound to support the award. Town Meeting must approve the contract, and if that approval is not given, the JLMC steps in again and tries to mediate a settlement.

"Some how, some way, these things eventually get resolved," he said.

But Griffin pointed out the process with the JLMC is only applicable to police and fire unions. If one of the other union contracts, such as the teachers' contract, remains at an impasse, a mediator would be assigned to try to help the parties compromise. In the meantime, the provisions of the expired contract usually stay in force unless the contract itself provides otherwise.

"There are a number of teacher contracts that remain unresolved across the state, including Silver Lake and Dedham," he said, adding teachers' unions will often institute a "work to rule," — a temporary job action during which time employees do the minimum required and refuse to provide any of the volunteer services traditionally offered, as the CTA has said it will do.

the grass in various areas around the school.

"This is an awful way to end the school year," Hussey said.

Cohasset Middle High School principal Jack DeLorenzo called the police department before 6 a.m. Tuesday. DeLorenzo went immediately to the school after receiving a call at home from Ed Leary, who was the first to arrive.

When students started to arrive much of the school's exterior areas had become a crime scene investigation with detectives taking photographs and collecting evidence that could have identifying fingerprints.

DeLorenzo stood on the sidewalk in front of the school as dozens of parents drove up to drop their children off. Most parents were initially relieved to find out there had not been another threat. Hussey said there are no new leads in that investigation.

"I'm going to make a special announcement asking for the kids' help," DeLorenzo said about finding out who is responsible for the vandalism.

Hussey said it is likely there was more than one person involved in the incident, because it would take at least two people to overturn the golf cart. The graffiti messages — some of which state 2005 — could be the mark of some teens in this year's graduating class.

"We will work very closely with the police department and make every effort to find the individual or individuals responsible and hold them accountable for their actions."

— Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh

The most helpful tool in solving the crime could be the surveillance video.

After the May incident when a note threatening students was left at the front door, the school video surveillance system has been used for security reasons. Hussey said the tape has been sent off to be enhanced to allow better identification.

Hussey said motivation for the vandalism isn't clear. He said it does not appear that certain classroom or office windows or areas of the building were specifically targeted. However, some of the messages left on school grounds did name certain staff members.

Hussey said the vandalism "is willful and malicious destruction of property, which is a very serious crime." He said jail time is a potential punishment that can be meted out for felonies. Hussey hopes the culprits, as well as the community at large, are aware of the seriousness of this vandalism.

As a result of the incident, Hussey said his officers will be "doing more in that area" on a regular basis.

"To have this type of destruction in an environment that is supposed to be safe... it's sad to see that," he said, adding it goes way beyond a potential prank.

This is the second time in two weeks vandalism has occurred at the school. Hussey said graffiti was discovered on the morning of Tuesday June 14 on walkways and on the athletic department golf cart. That incident is also being investigated, he said.

Facilities manager Brian Adams said Wednesday two workers spent all of Tuesday and Wednesday trying to clean up the mess. While he couldn't give an estimate on the total cost, the labor alone could run from $2,000 to $4,000.

He said the three windows and the glass by the front door is all special order glass that is expensive to replace.

Adams said graffiti remover, which is a substance that helps break up the paint, and a power washer is being used. He said a more abrasive cleaner may be needed for the concrete or stucco areas. The graffiti from the week before is still visible on the concrete, and ultimately, it may need to be painted.

Adams also said the four shrubs which were ripped out have been replanted. "We'll see how they make out," he said.

School committee chairman Jamie Williams said she is very disappointed with the actions of the students who were involved.

"The vandalism that occurred at our high school shows a complete disrespect for the property of others, and appears to be consistent with an annual pattern of unacceptable behavior during the last week of school," Williams said. "We will work with Chief Hussey to remedy this unfortunate situation, so that our schools continue to provide a safe and secure learning environment."

Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh said the incidents like this will not be tolerated.

"This behavior is an act of violence. It is unacceptable, disrespectful, and will not be tolerated in our community," she said. "We will work very closely with the police department and make every effort to find the individual or individuals responsible and hold them accountable for their actions."

Walsh also said she did not want the incident to dampen an otherwise positive last day of school.

"Around the district there were a number of students again who crossed the 'red carpet' (just as they began the school year) as they exited the assembly at Deer Hill and prepared the transition to Cohasset Middle High School," Walsh said. "There wasn't a dry eye in the house as parents and teachers watched a slide show of the year in review at Deer Hill."

"Osgood School was also a buzz of activity as parents and students visited classrooms preparing for September and teachers exited the building to give a final wave to students as the final bus rolled. And at the middle-high school students finished up on final exams and prepared for a well deserved break after this long school year."

Overall, she said, this school year has left her "looking forward to September."

Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh surveys the graffiti along one side of the middle-high school Tuesday

The Class of 2005 left its mark at the high school — and on the athletic department golf cart last week. This week vandals overturned the golf cart that was parked by the middle-high school garage doors.

After the first incident, Derek Lincoln of the Department of Public Works uses water pressure to try to wash the graffiti sprayed on high school grounds. Paint was left all over the sidewalk and stairs in front of the high school Monday night (June 13). This week's incident was far worse.

Students arrive at school Tuesday to a sea of yellow caution tape and police cruisers. This week's vandalism was the second incident in two weeks.

Meet Cohasset's two newest police officers

By Samantha Brown

Officers Pat Kenney and Ed Bagley are the newest additions to the Cohasset Police Department. Both have been on the department for roughly five months.

The Cohasset Police Department has undergone many changes over the past two years, the most recent of which is the addition of two new officers to the force.

Officers Ed Bagley and Pat Kenney have been on the payroll in Cohasset for roughly five months now, and both say the experience thus far has been great.

Bagley, who works the 4 p.m. to midnight shift, comes to Cohasset having served for 17 years on the Chatham Police Department on Cape Cod.

"Everyone here has been very nice," he said, adding the transition has gone well.

Bagley joined the Chatham department at the young age of 20, first as a temporary summer officer. He said he had never really thought about becoming a police officer until he took a criminal justice course in college, but he enjoyed the work so much, he applied for the summer officer position at the conclusion of the school year.

As he prepared to go back to school, Bagley was suddenly offered a choice, as the department offered him a full-time position. He decided to stay with the department and the rest, as they say, is history.

Bagley was born and raised in Quincy, and after a while, he began thinking about moving off the Cape and back to his hometown. When the opportunity presented itself in Cohasset, he knew it would be a perfect fit.

"This is the best place I've ever worked," he said, adding the community is what really sets Cohasset apart. "The people have been welcoming and very friendly. They're willing to discuss basically anything, and that's not limited to police work."

While Bagley works at night, Kenney works during the day on the 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. shift. Originally from West Roxbury, Kenney is now a Milton resident who has been an officer for 24 years.

Prior to becoming an officer, Kenney had served the public as an EMT (Emergency Medical Technician) for the city of Boston since 1977, which he really liked. However, during that time he had much interaction with the Boston Police Department and began thinking of changing careers.

"I decided it was something I wanted to do," he said of becoming an officer, and he went for it. Now, he couldn't imagine doing anything else.

Kenney said although it might be a cliché, the reason he decided to become an officer is simply so he could help people. He said it is not in his nature to sit idly by and watch when someone is being wronged or is in general need of assistance, and being a police officer enables him to give help to those who need it.

Kenney comes to Cohasset having served as an officer in both Lincoln and Milton, and said he enjoys his new surroundings.

"It's a beautiful place to work, I like everything about it," he said.

When not working, both say they enjoy spending time with family. Kenney has two sons, Patrick, 24 and Matthew, 22, and Bagley has a little girl Abigail who is 2-1/2.

Officers work long shifts as well as weekends and holidays, and Bagley said that makes it even more important to spend time with family on days off because "they don't get to see you as much as other families do." When not at work, Bagley said he takes Abigail to the playground or to her gymnastics class, but he said she also loves going to visit her father's fellow officers at the department.

In addition, on days off, Bagley said he enjoys watching sports events and said he is "of course" a Red Sox fan as well as a Patriots fan.

For Kenney, downtime means he can also spend some time enjoying his favorite hobby — reading.

"I read all the time," he said, adding his preference is action adventure novels.

But both say no matter where they are, there is never a time that they feel truly separated from their jobs, as they both feel once you are a police officer, you are always a police officer, whether the uniform is on or off.

"They don't pay us to be working 24-hours a day, but you do," Bagley said.

ROW, ROW, ROW YOUR BOAT

The Cohasset Maritime Institute off Parker Avenue is a non-profit organization that provides affordable and enjoyable rowing for the local community. Each year CMI provides instructional rowing to diverse age groups. Over the last several years CMI has been rehabbing the boathouse roof, repairing its boats, and purchasing safety and training equipment. This year CMI has launched an effort to raise money for new sliding seat boats and a docking system. Saturday's "erg-a-thon" at Shaw's was a CMI fundraiser. Above, high school students Kyle Ryan and Emerald Shirley merrily row despite the heat. At right, Conor Dwyer watches while Lindsey Beiche, 4, makes a donation.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Accounting audit

Making a suggestion to spend some money in order to save in the long run can be a good thing.

We hope the school committee and school administration will take this in the spirit that it is intended.

We think the school committee should hire an outside accounting firm to come in and go over the school books.

This is not to imply that there has been any wrongdoing. But with last year's changing-of-the-guard in the superintendent's office and what has been a revolving door in the business manager's office – an outside review might help straighten out some of the fiscal year expenditure confusion.

From where we sit former Supt. of Schools Edward Malvey had expertise in handling school systems undergoing major building projects and he was also a fine educator. But he may not have been "a numbers guy." For years we sat through school committee meetings during Dr. Malvey's watch when the entire school budget was presented on two pages of paper, double-spaced.

(In contrast, we actually broke our photo-copier making copies of the town budget book and its hundreds of pages that we borrowed from Town Hall.)

Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh has inherited a budgetary headache that is turning into a migraine which needs serious attention.

An independent look at the past few fiscal years might put the schools on more solid financial footing going forward. We don't think for a second there is a "pot" of money to be found – but we do think the source of problems, such as unpaid tuition reimbursement, could be unearthed.

Simply put, independent accounting oversight couldn't do any harm.

School budgets, by their very nature, are often criticized by the taxpayers. Town Meeting, by law, approves the bottom line of the school budget so the individual line items are not "locked in" as they are with the town side of the budget.

The reason for the difference is based in the fact that schools need flexibility. If more special education is required or there's an unexpected influx of students – money can be moved around to accommodate budget needs without voter approval.

This can be a good or a bad thing. In the past, maintenance money was diverted to other needs and the schools were not kept up. Cohasset wasn't alone in this practice – schools all over the state were falling apart from a combination of age and neglect.

We think everyone – parents, teachers, school officials, senior citizens and so on – all want the best education for Cohasset kids. Not everyone agrees that the schools are being run as efficiently as they could be. There is also a debate – that has divided the school committee – on whether there is sufficient discretionary money to be cut to save teaching positions.

We think an influx of accountants with calculators could go a long way to "clear the air" so to speak. It would be nice to move forward, so the school committee and administration can talk about the direction education should take and not have to be bogged down counting paperclips.

Honor code

As young children we learn not to "tell" on our friends or siblings. If you do, you risk being described as a tattletale or worse a "snitch."

But there's a real difference between a youngster, who sees his brother slip his lima beans under the table to Fido without mom's knowledge, and teens who may have information or knowledge about a crime.

It's time for students to report to the police any information they may have about the vandalism that occurred at the middle-high school this week.

The profanity and obscenity in the graffiti is bad enough. The damage to the school is also both costly and reflects a lack-of-respect for the school and the town.

What happened could not be described as an end-of-school-year prank. We're not talking about stringing toilet paper all around and spraying shaving cream, which can be washed away.

We can't even publish or describe some of the graffiti because it's not suitable for a community newspaper. But it reminds us of the Halloween teen melee in the late 1990s when obscene graffiti was painted on the Osgood Play Park (behind the then Osgood School).

Teens need to band together and not tolerate this behavior. They also need to come forward and share what they know about the crime so the appropriate punishment can be meted out.

Vandalism is not cool. Unchecked, it quickly turns places into dumps.

Taxpayers anted up a lot of money for what is essentially a brand-new middle-high school. What happened this week is beyond sad and disappointing, it's disgusting.

Oh no, here comes another one!

Cut discretionary items, not teachers

TO THE EDITOR:

A school system without a full teaching staff and appropriately-sized classrooms is nothing.

A good deal of energy has been expended, and an ocean of ink spread across these pages, as both school committee and voters debate the plight of Cohasset's schools in the aftermath of a failed override.

It is helpful to recall the chronology of events that have led to this heated debate, and it is important for all citizens to understand how we arrived at the elimination of four teachers from Cohasset classrooms.

Let's look at the record…

After the override failed, our school committee was obliged to balance the school budget. There was a clear choice, either eliminating teachers, or examining discretionary expenses which could be reduced.

At a school committee meeting on June 2, members debated vigorously on which of these courses to choose.

One week later, a special meeting was called at which Superintendent Denise Walsh was asked to report on discretionary areas in the school budget that might be reduced or eliminated, in order to fund teaching positions. School committee chair, Jamie Williams, advised the committee and all present that the purpose of this meeting was to discuss discretionary spending cuts, and that any discussion pertaining to the merits of the meeting itself would not be allowed. Consequently, when a member of the audience and another member of the school committee, proceeded to interject comments questioning the meeting's merits, both speakers were redirected by chairman Williams to focus on the stated purpose of the meeting.

Instead of focusing on the non-academic overhead expenditures, the superintendent asked the school principals to identify cuts in their budgets. As a point of interest, Superintendent Walsh stated that she really couldn't identify any discretionary items in her budget, adding that, "a book shelf in the teacher's lounge was an academic expense." I commend the effort of each Principal as they were told to eliminate items from their budgets, while the Superintendent offered next to nothing in her overhead expenditure cuts.

Between the heated meetings of June 16 and June 23, some past and present PSO leaders brought pressure to bear on school committee members to vote for eliminating teachers from our children's classrooms. Their reasoning being, that a cut of teachers would sufficiently motivate parents to vote for an override in 2006, and that because they had stated to the town that if the override failed they would cut teachers, they had no choice.

It is important to note that most voters who were not in favor of the override (and I voted to support it), did not specify that the schools eliminate classroom teaching positions, but demonstrate more fiscal responsibility with their budgets and be more responsive to the taxpayers who supply the funds for their budget.

On Thursday, June 23, the vote was taken. Committee members Wilson, McCarthy and Flynn voted to eliminate four of our children's teachers from our schools rather than eliminate discretionary spending from their school budget, or adopt any revenue producing suggestions that were offered.

Some items that outweighed the value of teachers include new administrative raises and hires, administration cell phones, and bus maintenance at $100 per hour.

Remember that teachers = education.

The teachers to be cut included a new first grade teaching position, a new high school English teacher, and two teaching positions saved from 2005 budget cuts through private intervention. It was a sad day. What was even more disturbing was to see members of the community trying to offer suggestions to examine areas for cutting costs, or generating revenue, being told, "It's too late, you should have gotten involved sooner." The die had been cast.

Perhaps some present PSO leaders and some members of the school committee, can reexamine their direction. Although I am certain that everyone involved in the process, believes that they have the best motives at heart, our focus must be on maintaining the heart of the classroom: our teachers. As parents and administrators we must concentrate our efforts on meeting the needs of our children, and those needs are best served by the teachers in their classrooms. As a parent of three young children in the Cohasset school system, I feel strongly about this and urge other parents to support school committee members Williams and Slanetz as they begin the daunting task of re-educating many well-meaning people, to help them understand that when the community says "Live within your budget," it does not mean compromise our children's classrooms.

Recreation Commission grateful to sponsors

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Recreation Commissioners would like to extend their most sincere gratitude to our 2005, Playground program sponsors.

Responding to the commissioner's letter of last April, were 14 local business and civic organizations who registered for one of three levels of sponsorship for our summer, 7 week day camp-type program for children ages 3 1/2 -12 years.

Levels of sponsorship were $500, $200 or $100 which resulted in logo and listings of each business/organization on both the children's and staff's program T-shirts as well as notation in our summer brochure.

In our effort to become 100 percent financially self-supporting, while affording to continuation of top quality services, the commissioners wish to thank and recognize the following local supporters: Goodwin Graphics, Pilgrim Co-Operation Bank, Stop & Shop Supermarket, Anderson Fuel, The Good Sport, Inc., MKR Building Solutions, Kristine A. Grazioso, D.M.D., South Shore Music Circus, The Junk Guy, The American Legion, post 118, Cohasset Veterans of Foreign War, Cohasset Collision Center, Inc., Bernard's, and JJ's Dairy Hut.

Via their sponsorship each sponsor has demonstrated their concern for an interest in our children and community, hence, have benefited all residents and tax payers.

During late winter, 2005 the Commission will again send letters to local business and civic organizations regarding this unique advertising/sponsorship opportunity. You may also call the Cohasset Recreation Department office anytime, at 781-383-4109, should you be interested in sponsorships.

Why I voted to save four teachers

COMMENTARY

ALFRED E. SLANETZ

Last Thursday, I voted against the FY06 School Budget because I believe that it erodes the quality of education in Cohasset. In our vote the other night, padded budget lines, poor management and free buses won out over saving four teachers. The result will be fewer honors classes and electives in the high school and larger class sizes in the elementary schools and the high school. In my opinion, this is an abdication of the school committee's fiduciary responsibility to provide the highest quality education and get the most educational value for our tax dollars.

The FY06 Budget as written cuts three elementary school and one high school English teaching positions. I had presented various ways to re-deploy $180,000 to save teaching positions by cutting overhead expenses and raising revenue from transportation fees. Some of these cost savings were agreed to by the administration including increasing the efficiency of bus maintenance ($25,000); negotiating a different plan for cell phones ($10,000); accounting for the fact that students prefer to buy their own books in AP classes so that they can highlight and write in them ($22,500).

Furthermore, fees for non-mandated transportation (instituted by many towns including Scituate, Norwell, Weymouth, Hanover) would conservatively generate $125,000. Since three bus drivers have recently resigned, now is the time to institute such a policy without having to layoff personnel. One of the remaining bus drivers volunteered to help out over the summer to institute the new plan. While nobody likes extra fees, to me the choice was clear: a free bus or teachers in the classroom.

How could the school committee not save teaching positions? The answer is school committee/ PSO politics. The PSO leadership actively lobbied against saving the four teachers. There exists a feeling that the parents should be punished for not voting for the override resulting from a perceived lack of broad parental support and anger about the failure of the override. Another posture by some was that "we would lose our integrity" if we didn't implement the teacher cuts that were promised. The theory is that if people feel the pain now, then next year they will vote for a much larger override. There were some who felt that it was good that the two privately funded positions in the elementary schools were being eliminated, based upon a belief that "public education should be publicly funded". If voters think that other sources of money may be available or we can save teachers without the override, they may not vote for the next override. There were still others who felt that the failure of the override was a vote to cut teachers!

Additionally, the administration did not rally to save the teachers. At first the administration took the position that all money in the school budget is equally important to education and proposed the most painful non-salary classroom cuts possible. There was a general sense that "if the community isn't willing to pay for it, then we'll provide them with the program they paid for". There was also a resistance to manage certain support areas in a more cost effective manner. For example, when asked about jointly bidding with other towns for out of district SPED transportation, one week the legality was questioned, the next week, the answer was "we're already doing it"! Then there was the $168,000 in additional salaries that magically appeared in the unscheduled school committee meeting about alternative solutions to balance the budget. Later I was told that step and column changes, after the budget is set in February, happen every year. Neither the superintendent nor the building principals supported efforts to save teachers.

This group of constituents (PSO Leadership/ Administration) wants to see the schools actively managed to a crisis so that people will vote for the next override.

This group of constituents (PSO Leadership/ Administration) wants to see the schools actively managed to a crisis so that people will vote for the next override. While an override will likely be necessary next year, wouldn't a more proactive position be one of adding programs and accomplishing objectives in a forward looking strategic plan rather than employing scare tactics? Wouldn't a more positive incentive to get out the parental vote be user fees?

The risk with betting the farm on the next override is that if the override fails to pass, we continue on a downward spiral requiring us to lay off far more teachers next year, and adding years to the recovery of the quality education our community desires. While I hope I am wrong, based upon the fact that the Cohasset override failed this year, as they did in most other towns, the odds are against us. Furthermore, by not reallocating money into the classroom from various overhead line items, taxpayers can still make the case that we are not treating their money with the respect it deserves, thereby fueling an argument to vote against the override. The lack of support shown for quality education in the classroom may jeopardize contract negotiations. A less favorable contract would cost us more than if we partnered with the teachers in a good faith effort to optimize the quality of our educational program.

In states such as California, where Prop 2-1/2 has been around a long time, private money has been pouring into public schools in communities which care about education. For example, residents and businesses of Mill Valley, CA (Population 13,500) donate $1.2M of private money annually to the Mill Valley Public Schools. While, some in Cohasset want to take the high moral position that public education should be publicly funded, in this political climate which exists on the local, State and Federal level, the practical reality is that without private money, public education is more likely than not to be of increasingly lower quality. Private money to supplement taxpayer money is a path to quality. Just ask the children who had a great school year based upon the generosity of donors to the three teachers fund and the hard work of Barbara Buckley. Barbara does not deserve the criticism given to her last Thursday night; she deserves our accolades, as do the many others who make contributions to our schools. Finally, there is also no reason why we shouldn't use our money wisely to create as much educational value as possible. In my opinion, we should use all of the tools at our disposal to provide a high quality education and not bet the farm solely on annual overrides.

As there often is when there is a healthy debate, there was controversy. Sometimes people became emotional. In the interest of keeping the unscheduled School Committee Meeting two weeks ago focused on its express purpose of considering alternative cuts and revenue sources to the teaching positions, Chairperson Jamie Williams abruptly stopped PSO President Lucia Flibotte from questioning the merits of having the discussion of alternatives. It is my understanding that Jamie later apologized to Lucia for the manner in which she reacted. It had been explained that it was a special school committee meeting with an express purpose and we had already had the debate of whether to discuss alternatives in the previous meeting which had a full agenda. I may not agree with Lucia's point of view but I respect her right to have an opinion and respect that she has done a lot for the schools. It was also suggested by some that the school committee should leave the running of the schools to the paid professionals and that it was disrespectful for members of the school committee to propose alternatives. We have to learn to discuss issues, not smear those with the vision and strength of character to come forward with ideas.

In the micro-world of school committee/PSO politics, the easiest thing to do is to avoid controversy and vote the way they want you to. Two school committee members (Chairperson Jamie Williams and I) held their ground, voted against the budget and tried to save the teaching positions. One school committee member changed her position in last week's meeting and voted for cutting teachers. The old budget that cut teachers but kept padded budget line items was approved. In the end, the only ones punished are the kids.

Alfred E. Slanetz, Ph.D., is Vice Chairman of the Cohasset School Committee.

New battlefields in the pot war

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I don't know about you but if I were a narc I'd dump the badge and invest my IRA in Acapulco Gold, Jamaica Ganja or Big Sur Holy Weed. I don't know if it is worth the effort fighting "reefer madness" anymore.

Now, don't confuse me with a fan of marijuana.

I haven't had a cigarette of any shape, form, medical quality or condition of legality since May 17, 1964, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon when I got on a Fifth Avenue bus in front of St. Patrick's Cathedral.

But it seems like every time the Good Guys get a break, like the Supreme Court giving permission for the Feds to overrule the state laws on medicinal pot, the Bad Guys come up with a game-tying touchdown of their own.

California was one of those states where folks with glaucoma were allowed to puff away on the weed legally on the assumption it was good for you.

I was reading last week where Federals nares knocked over a storefront medical research center in Cool, Calif., and arrested attorney Dale Schafer, 50, and his wife, Marion Fry, 48, on charges of growing and distributing marijuana.

California was one of those states where folks with glaucoma were allowed to puff away on the weed legally on the assumption it was good for you. Of course, anything that is good for you immediately comes under government suspicion.

"They are charged with violating the old marijuana laws, which are now back in effect, and I'm hoping that the jury will see that Dr. Fry was acting as a physician," said their attorney, Laurence Lichter.

But that's not all, as the TV pitchmen like to say.

On the same page in USA Today was a report that Canadians now have access to a new drug called Sativex, which is derived from the marijuana plant and which you spray in your mouth rather than smoke.

Sativex is expensive, $124.95 a vial, which provides 51 squirts, and that averages out to $2.44 a squirt. Not that I know anything about it personally, but if you could get a quality toke for $2.44 or less before May 17, 1964, the dealer wasn't advertising.

Of course, Sativex is unauthorized in the United States and will be for years but I'm sure it won't be long before a brisk trade has developed between Niagara Falls, Ont., and Niagara Falls, N.Y. among grandsons of men who did it in the 1920s.

But that's still not all, as the TV pitchmen still like to say.

Chronic Candy of Corona, Calif., is marketing hemp-flavored lollypops, with two of them sold in a "nickel bag," and the guarantee that "Every lick is like taking a hit." You don't have to be a pothead to understand the meaning of "hemp" and a "nickel bag" and a "hit."

"The last thing we need is for kids to be acquiring a taste for a drug that's illegal," says Michigan State Rep. Dudley Spade, who has proposed a state ban on candy that contains pot-flavoring.

"There's nothing in it to get you high," says Tony Van Pelt, the president of Chronic Candy, who imports them from Europe. "My mom thinks she gets a buzz from it. I don't have the heart to tell her it's just the sugar."

Some tips when choosing a doctor

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Trying to choose a doctor for some procedure your "GP" has recommended? Well, this issue has come up in the lives of many of us as we travel on our way through maturity. Many just ask someone who's had the problem and gets what sailors call local knowledge. Others cast a wider net, sometimes consulting books, lists of doctors, etc. — and, of course, there's the internet. Since this is a quasi-communication from your Board of Health, we will not describe the way as if it were cast in stone. That's not our way.

A casual look at the huge tome Blue Cross (BCBS) sends to its subscribers each year lists doctors in a diversity of disciplines. Take "orthopaedic (BCBS argot for orthopedic which everyone else uses) surgery." There are 197 such "specialists" listed in the State. So many to chose from, how does one choose? If we could but receive a little more information, perhaps we could select the right guy for each of us. Well, let's say, at the outset, that's not the way it works. The bureaucracy has to be careful about recommending the best from a list. That's favoritism and not ethical, honest or, as it turns out, legal. What we can do is garner more information from a number of sources; the most useful of which is:

http://profiles.massmedboard.org/Profiles/MA-Physician-Profile-View-Doctor.asp

This link to the Mass DPH web site gives the names and contact information of all the doctors signed up by BCBS. Similar health plans have the same information. The link allows you to enter the name of the doctor and get his profile. This profile contains 21 pieces of information in seven categories. Those supplied by the doctor are name, address, phone, type of practice, etc. Other categories give education and training, specialty, honors and awards, and published works. The last categories list criminal convictions and records of discipline by hospitals or the Massachusetts Board of Registration in Medicine.

So, now we have a list of doctors who have passed the minimum requirements of probably graduating from "Med." school, paying their bills and staying out of jail. How do we winnow further?

Well, let's say that, from our original list of 197, we have maybe 150 we feel are eligible, in our particular health plan and meet our requirements. Perhaps class averages in Med. school are a criterion, since that was probably the last time they were competitively compared as a group, but what does that really tell about how they've matured in their profession? Perhaps the only way is to get back to the sailors local knowledge.

We all have a doctor whom we trust. He may not be our main doctor, but he seems to perhaps make the most sense. If we ask him for a list of patients who have had a procedure you are contemplating, and if you call a few of these people, you can probably get more information than you need to make a good decision. Because of the 150 doctors on your beginning list, they follow a statistical or bell shaped curve. The best and the worst of the list represent, depending on judgment criteria, about 15percent of the doctors or about 30 doctors. Those in the middle, 120 doctors, are, because of training, more than competent to accomplish the procedures necessary to ensure a healthy outcome. If you ask those in your area who've had the procedure, you'll hear all the horror stories and all the glowing reports you need to make up your own list of the doctors you should use.

Another consideration, according to experts, is the supplementary care and support given during the medical procedure. Some hospitals are better equipped and their staff better trained and experienced to undertake certain types of procedures. Choose the hospital which has the heaviest case load of types of procedures in which you are interested. They have a staff which has seen both the best and the worst of the procedure, and they are, by experience, better able to cope.

Finally, there is rehabilitation after the procedure. Rehab centers are a new large component of the health-care industry. They have reputations from good to bad. But don't depend on old information about rehab centers. The industry is in a growth spurt, and different techniques and procedures are rewriting the book on rehab. Depend on your doctor's recommendation about rehab, he's probably a lot more current than anyone else.

COMMENTARY

ELAINE BRESLOW

Last Thursday evening I attended the School Committee Meeting and was encouraged by some information that represents a clear opportunity for our entire community to galvanize itself and make a difference. On the agenda was Superintendent Dennis Walsh's discussion of the possible revision of chapter 70 state aid for education funding and its impact on towns such as ours.

The Department of Education and the Senate are working through a bill proposed by Senator Therese Murray, to reformulate how chapter 70 state aid is apportioned to communities. How does this potentially affect Cohasset? The proposed Department of Education model caps local contribution at 85 percent, guaranteeing 15 percent in state aid. Cohasset currently receives 10 percent from the state for education. It was mentioned that this shift could possibly result in as much as a $600,000. increase in state funding for our town. In a current climate of financial uncertainty it cannot be overstated how positively such funding would impact our citizenry—old and new.

What follows is a template of the letter kindly drafted by Superintendent Walsh and Sarah Porter encouraging our elected representatives to explore the proposed formula revision and what it could mean for our community. If you do nothing else today…cut out the letter, sign it and send it ASAP. We have the ability to deliver a powerful message that the Town of Cohasset values education and equally important, it is willing to work together to explore creative funding possibilities. Copies of the letter can also be obtained by: visiting the school web site www.cohassetk12.org (see Sample Letter to Legislators Re: chapter 70 revision), Paul Pratt Library, Cohasset Elder Affairs, Post Office Bulletin Board, School Offices, or call me. Help a neighbor who can't get a copy or can't get to the post office. While there is no guarantee that even if each and every one of us were to post a letter, there is an assured certainty of little progress if we sit back and do nothing. Let's work collectively to keep the "C" in Cohasset: Community, Consensus, Collaboration.

RE: MG.L.c.70 Funding of Public Schools
Dear Mr. Hedlund and Mr. Bradley:

It was reported in a June 12th Boston Globe article entitled "Income Eyed for Funding Formula," that the Department of Education and the Senate, through a bill proposed by Senator Therese Murray, are working to reformulate how chapter 70 state aid is apportioned to communities.

The article stated that in addition to taking the median income of a community into consideration when determining a community's wealth, there is also a discussion that is taking place as to whether local contributions to education should be capped. The proposed Department of Education model caps the local contribution at 85%, thus guaranteeing at least 15% state aid. As a community that currently receives 10% from the state for education, Cohasset would greatly benefit from this revised formula. I urge you to explore Senator Murray's bill and the DOE proposal and to support an increase in state aid for education to your district.

Sincerely,

YOUR NAME AND ADDRESS

Romney floats bold new idea on health care

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

People expect cigar-chomping politicians to play golf on taxpayer time, and prominent members of the House blithely fulfilled the stereotype last week, providing the first really good tabloid eyepoke of the Sal DiMasi era.

Far less expected – and of way more consequence – was a bold idea on health care floated by the governor, one that would make Massachusetts unique in the nation in the unlikely event the Legislature acquiesces to conferring national policy innovator status on the chief executive.

Gov. Mitt Romney acknowledged at last that no, he's not just "party building" when he travels to the South Carolinas and New Hampshires and Michigans, he's testing the water for president. He also proposed that citizens who can afford health insurance, but don't buy it, face penalties from state government such as the loss of tax deductions.

The governor likened the idea to requiring welfare recipients to work, saying the government has a right to demand that people take as much responsibility for themselves as they reasonably can. He said he came up with his individual-mandate proposal himself, after brainstorming health reform ideas with his staff.

The governor was also responding, wholeheartedly, to a report prepared by the Urban Institute on behalf of the Blue Cross Blue Shield Foundation. That study concluded the only path to universal health care was a mandate – on employers, which Romney rejects, or individuals, which he now will tout nationally. That will make two Massachusetts governors who've linked health-care-for-all to their presidential ambitions; and both plans have earned praise from Sen. Edward Kennedy. Mike Dukakis used an employer mandate in his, but the recession of the early 90s killed that plan.

The governor said there's no way a mandate would make sense in the current health care market. Instead, he said, it's essential that state law be changed so that insurers can offer a scaled-down, lower cost basic package of benefits. The mandate and the new insurance products are on the table for health care reform talks this fall.

Mitt Romney, Reformer, played extremely well against the image of John Rogers, Cigar Connoisseur. For Romney, that is. The House majority leader, seven committee chairs, et. al., were captured on camera and splashed across the Herald last week, playing golf in a charity tournament hosted by Demetrius Atsalis, D-Barnstable.

The "Missing Links" caper would have been unattractive just on the basis of state reps in shorts, but they were also smoking cigars, some of them, and it was Tuesday afternoon, and the budget was stuck in conference committee and past deadline to land on the governor's desk in time for 10 days of review before the start of the fiscal year. And the charity doesn't exist yet. "He wants to establish a scholarship fund. It would be the Demetrius Atsalis scholarship fund," a spokesman for Atsalis told the Herald.

Not a single veteran at the State House likely believes that the politicians' presence at the State House would have speeded up the settlement of budget differences between the House and Senate, but the embarrassing story might have. In any event, the budget did indeed emerge from conference Thursday afternoon, balanced only by a $600 million drawdown from state reserves. The new budget features just 38 outside sections, down from 422 in the current version. House budget aides said it raises state spending by about 3 percent.

• Romney takes another run at unemployment insurance — Not content to stop with health care, the governor also floated Round Two of his bid for a drop in the employer premium for unemployment insurance and a shortening of the benefit payout period. He said the current rate of $687 per employee and the 30-week payout period is costing the state "thousands" of jobs; he wants those numbers reduced to $586 and 26 weeks, respectively.

• FERC seems sure to get ability to locate LNG terminals — The US Senate included a provision in its version of federal energy legislation granting unilateral power for the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to site Liquefied Natural Gas terminals. The move is unpleasant for Massachusetts, because a terminal has been proposed for Fall River and nearly all local and state officials oppose it. But with the US House and President Bush also in favor of giving FERC the capacity to site the facilities, the terminal seems closer than ever to being built. Residents await US Sen. Edward Kennedy's next move on the matter.

• Assigned risk plan cut down by superior court — The assigned risk plan instituted by Insurance Commissioner Julianne Bowler does not pass legal muster, Superior Court Judge Ralph Gants ruled. Bowler issued an order last year that, simply put, reconstituted the pool of high-risk drivers so the costs of insuring them can be spread out among all insurers. But Commerce Insurance, the largest underwriter in the state, brought suit against Bowler's new rules. Gants agreed with Commerce, saying Bowler overstepped her statutory authority by instituting the new rules, and "they must be vacated." It remains to be seen what step Bowler will take next, or how the costs of high-risk drivers will be shared in the future.

• Sullivan chosen for us attorney's advisory committee — US Attorney General Alberto Gonzales asked Michael Sullivan, a former Republican representative from Abington and now US Attorney for Massachusetts, to serve on a 23-member national-level Advisory Committee of United States Attorneys. Sullivan was one of three district US Attorneys nationwide asked to serve. His visibility has already risen recently because of the prosecution of former House Speaker Thomas Finneran for alleged perjury and obstruction of justice.

• Romney says biotech marketing needs improvement: From Philadelphia, where he attended a national conference of the biotechnology industry, Gov. Romney said the state needs to do a better job marketing its strengths as an incubator, so to speak, for the growing field. Romney downplayed the recent controversy over stem cell research, though he did say he'd heard support for his socially conservative point of view.

• Boston Harbor declared environmentally healthy — The Boston Foundation issued a report saying the harbor, made infamous by George H.W. Bush in his 1988 campaign against Michael Dukakis, is now a healthy marine environment, after a multi-billion dollar cleanup effort centered on the Deer Island treatment plant and the diversion of sewer overflows during heavy rains. The foundation also noted public perception of the harbor hasn't improved as much as the water; the harbor is underused recreationally; and many beaches still spend too many days each summer closed to swimming because of unsafe levels of bacteria.

• Linsky's not lovin' bright 80-foot McDonald's signs in Natick — For the third time in as many terms, Rep. David Linsky is trying to pass legislation requiring the McDonald's corporation to extinguish the giant illuminated signs on the Massachusetts Turnpike that his constituents complain keep them awake at night. At a public hearing on the bill, a representative from the McDonald's Corp. acknowledged the signs do lead to increased sales, but said the reason the company opposes the bill is public safety. Truckers might swerve into service areas without the 80-foot signs providing plenty of advance warning, said Michael Kuronen. And under that logic, why do both sides of the sign need to be brightly lit? Linksy wanted to know. Kuronen admitted there was no safety factor there, except the signs do help light parking lots late at night.

• Affected councilor lauds elderly safety zone legislation — Quincy City Councilor Kevin Coughlin saw his father-in-law's life ruined by a speeding, "careless young driver" who inflicted massive injuries when he ran down the old man in 2004. Now, Coughlin and the city of Quincy are seeking passage of legislation that would allow the creation of elderly low-speed zones like the ones near schools. Quincy is home to a high proportion of elderly residents. The bill came close to passing both branches last session.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on two roll calls and local senators' votes on one roll call from the week of June 20-24.

APPROVE $23.9 BILLION FISCAL 2006 BUDGET (H 4200)

House 157-0, Senate 35-0, approved and sent to Gov. Mitt Romney a $23.9 billion budget for fiscal 2006 that begins on July 1. The measure was drafted by a House-Senate conference committee after each branch approved its own version. Romney now has ten days to propose amendments and veto any items. The $23.9 billion price tag is $222 million higher than the one approved by the House, $800 million more than the governor's version and $100 million less than the Senate plan. The budget includes only 38 outside, non-budget sections that are known on Beacon Hill as outside sections-- a figure substantially lower than the prior state budget that contained 422 outside sections. The package uses $600 million from the state's rainy day fund to help fund programs. Supporters said that the package is a fiscally responsible one that does not raise taxes, funds necessary programs and restores some of the cuts made during the state's fiscal crisis over the past few years. (A "Yes" vote is for the $23.9 billion budget).

SUSPEND RULES TO CONSIDER BUDGET (H 4200)

House 136-21, suspended rules in order to allow the House to consider the $23.9 billion state budget. Supporters of rule suspension said that the House should act quickly to approve the package in time for the beginning of the fiscal year on July 1. Opponents of rule suspension said that the package was only e-mailed to legislators about nine hours ago at 5 a.m. They argued that members have not had sufficient time to review the document and cast an informed vote. (A "Yes" vote is for suspending House rules in order to consider the budget. A "No" vote is against suspending the rules).

ALSO UPON BEACON HILL

INCREASE PARENTAL INVOVELMENT IN SCHOOLS (S 312)- The Education Committee accepted testimony on a bill establishing a grant program for the purpose of "encouraging schools to devise and implement programs to increase parental involvement in their children's academic experience." The bill outlines some of the possible programs including using the Internet to improve communication between teachers and parents about homework assignments and allowing schools to hire a parental involvement coordinator.

SCHOOL SPORTS AND VACATIONS (S 330)- The Education Committee is considering legislation dubbed by sponsors as "an act to promote family time." The measure prohibits school-sponsored sports games, practices and tournaments from being scheduled during the traditional December, February and April vacation weeks.

PUNISH PARENTS OF ABSENT STUDENTS (H 1093)- A controversial measure heard by the Education Committee would allow the imposition of up to a 30 day jail sentence and/or $1000 fine on a parent whose child is absent from school for more than 7 days during a six-month period. The proposal allows a court to order the sentence to be served only during evenings, weekends and holidays. Current law holds parents responsible but imposes only up to a $20 fine without a jail sentence.

SMOKING BY POLICE AND FIREFIGHTERS (H 149)- The Public Service Committee accepted testimony on legislation amending the current law that prohibits smoking by any police officer or firefighter hired after 1988. Current law also provides for the firing of anyone who violates the ban. The bill would give violators a second chance by allowing them to enter a smoking cessation prior to termination and permitting their firing only upon a second offense.

BAN "PHISHING" (S 192)- The Committee on Consumer Protection and Professional Licensure heard testimony on an "anti-phishing" bill making it a crime to solicit personal and financial information from individuals for the purpose of identity fraud. The measure is aimed at con artists, posing as bank officials, who send phony e-mails to consumers. The e-mails typically lead the consumer to a fake website that asks them to provide personal and financial information that is then used by these criminals to steal the person's identity, withdraw cash, run up credit card bills and apply for new credit cards. The proposal imposes up to a five-year prison sentence and/or $5000 fine on these perpetrators.

Cohasset ASP thanks Cohasset

TO THE EDITOR:

Just a note to thank everybody who has been so kind and generous with their support of our 18th annual Cohasset Appalachia Service Project adventure!

For providing space for our fund-raising events, special thanks to Donald Staszko (Cohasset Reality Trust); George Roukanakis (Olympic Citgo); Cohasset Rotary; the Selectmen; the Village Fair Committee; Jack DeLorenzo and the Cohasset Schools.

For hosting our preparatory workshops, special thanks to St. Anthony's, First Parish, St. Stephen's, and Second Congregational churches.

For donations of specific items, special thanks to Brian Noble (Noble's Camera), Ed Lappen (Lappen's Auto Supply), and many others.

And from our hearts we especially want to thank the hundreds of families and individuals who have taken part at all levels of support: worked fundraisers, bought our services and ASP stock, attended our events, and patted us on the back. It all helps keep us going!

One more request from Cohasset ASP for 2005: as 190 volunteers are concluding their week of hard work on 25-plus homes in southern West Virginia — please keep us in your thoughts and prayers as we say our "good-byes" to our ASP families and new friends, and begin to entertain thoughts of ASP 2006.

Didn't vote 'no' to cut teachers, programs

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing my first-ever letter to a newspaper because I am becoming very concerned about what I am reading regarding the reactions to the need for revising the school budget in light of the recent vote against a Proposition 2-1/2 override.

As a person who voted against the override, I want to make it clear to all the school committee members and school administration that I did not vote to cut teachers or educational programs. I voted as I did because I believe that those in the position of developing the school budgets have not really taken the initiative in working to keep costs in line. Rather, because overrides were passed almost routinely, they have been lulled into believing that this wealthy town will continue to pay without question.

I do not have children in the schools, but my children did attend public schools elsewhere in Massachusetts. I am a firm believer in public education, and I know that the quality of our schools not only benefits our community, but also directly affects the value of my own home. In fact, this may be the first time that I have ever voted against allocating more money for schools.

I applaud Jamie Williams and all those who are willing to do the hard work of really looking at the budget to find places where it is appropriate to make cuts. From what I have read and heard, this includes transportation and administrative costs. I agree with those who have said that the number of administrators seems too high for a school system of our size. And, given the small size of our town, I think we should be investigating the possibility of regionalizing any areas where economies of scale may apply.

I urge the school committee and the school administration to work together to look for all possible cuts in these other areas before they eliminate educational programs or teachers.

Run to benefit Dana-Farber

TO THE EDITOR:

Just a little over a week ago, Cohasset again hosted a Relay For Life in support of the American Cancer Society. Hats off to the organizers for a job well done.

For reasons close to my heart, I went up to see the luminaria Friday night. Walking a lap or two around the track, you could see just how many people have been touched by cancer, including those we love still fighting.

Because we still have far to go and much more research has yet to be done to cure all forms of cancer, I would like to ask your readers for their support as I run the Falmouth Road Race to benefit the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute and the Jimmy Fund. It's a seven-mile run in the hot humid heat of August; a perfect time for me to think of all the generous people contributing and supporting this cause.

For those who wish to donate, they may do so online via the DFCI web site, or checks made out to the DFCI and sent to 14 Summer St. will be forwarded by the end of July.

My sincere appreciation to all those who can help this cause too.

No harm in reviewing school budget

TO THE EDITOR:

Last week in the Mariner I read three fairly lengthy personal opinion pieces on the Cohasset school budget situation. Unfortunately, I came away with the strong impression that there are those in Cohasset who do not want to find the middle ground. It appears to come down to, "You are either with me or against me".

What harm can there be in continuing to review and possibly refine the 2005-2006 budget? Last year when utility costs were a big surprise item, I was told by a former School Committee member they viewed the budget as "a work in progress". No one, not Supt. Walsh or the School Committee should be insulted by the suggestion that there should be a second or a third look at decisions that we made pre-override vote. Why should we offhandedly criticize the suggestion to, at least in the short term, eliminate non-essential items? We need to decide what is the greater priority — I always believed it was keeping teachers employed and in the classroom.

It has been said many times but some refuse to accept, that the failure of the override was not a mandate for eliminating teachers or proposed positions. Some outspoken individuals treat this as a self-evident "truth", but we do not need to accept this faulty logic. If there are those on the School Committee who are sufficiently open-minded to attempt another pass at the budget, why stop them? The reason, some would say, is that "the credibility of the budget process" is at stake. So I ask you, should we be more concerned about the sanctity of a "process" than we are about our children's quality of education for 2005-2006?

Thank goodness a few members of the School Committee are willing to endure the personally insulting articles that flow ad infinitum with catch phrases like "bare-bones budget", "can't squeeze blood from a stone", "no fat budget" or my personal favorite, "transparent budget process". What on earth does that mean?

For the past six months I have heard many thoughtful suggestions and questions raised by parents and interested residents at the School Committee meetings. Many have gone unanswered or were dismissed offhandedly. When the discussion at one meeting touched the schools' unusually high transportation costs, I asked whether we were looking to bid out the service and sell the buses. The answer I received was that it was done 5 years ago, period.

Am I supposed to respect and accept that answer? Is this what we mean by "transparent". Perhaps if some individuals had truly listened to the many talented and intelligent Cohasset parents who want the best education for their children and show that desire by taking the time to attend meetings, send letters and emails to the Superintendent and Committee, and try to work within the system, we would have something resembling a consensus. Perhaps this shameful contentiousness we are exposed to in the Mariner week after week could be avoided.

Those who are truly interested in helping the schools and the town in the long term, should has Lynn Schwandt pointed out, lobby the Legislature to increase State aid. But in my view that does not mean sit on your duff and take a year out of children's educational lives so that some can say "I told you so — no override, no teachers". Even if only one or two positions are saved, shouldn't we continue to look for creative ways to get us through this tough time?

I believe the citizens who elected the School Committee expect them to continue to endeavor to provide the best education possible for 2005-2006, not throw in the towel and move on to 2006-2007. How better to preserve one's credibility than to go back to the drawing board, sharpen the pencils, and show us why you were elected?

A deeply divided school committee last week voted 3-2 to cut four teaching positions from the fiscal 2006 school budget.

Two of the teaching positions – slashed from last year's budget — were paid for through private fundraising this year. The other two positions were to be added for the 2005-2006 school year.

All tolled, the four positions will free up $180,000 in the budget, which with an anticipated special education cost reimbursement of $105,000, would make up the school's portion of the difference from the $400,000 failed override vote this spring.

Chairman Jamie Williams and vice chairman Alfred Slanetz were the two "nay" votes against cutting the positions.

"It's unacceptable to lay off teachers," said Slanetz, adding there are items in the budget which he considers discretionary and therefore, savings could have been found to save those salaries.

"For anyone who loves school to do anything but save teachers seems like a wrong decision," he said.

Slanetz pointed out with the loss of the two elementary positions that had been paid for with private funds this year, in addition to the loss of the proposed grade one teacher that would have been added this year, class sizes are likely to increase at the elementary level where class size should be the smallest. He said the optimal size for an elementary level classroom is between 12 and 15 students.

However, member Rick Flynn said Slanetz was making it sound like making the choice to go ahead with the cuts was a popular position. He reminded Slanetz the school committee has added teachers to the payroll for the past few years.

"The room wasn't full when we were adding teachers last year," Flynn said.

Flynn also noted when the privately funded positions were approved last year – it was understood the remedy could be a "one-shot deal" in that there might not be money in the budget for those teachers the following year.

Even with cutting four positions, the school budget is not balanced. Two weeks ago Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh announced an additional $168,000 is needed. At this time, it is unclear whether that money will be paid out of the fiscal 2006 budget as a 2006 bill, or as an unpaid bill from a previous year's budget.

Add that to the potential increase in teacher salaries for fiscal 2006 and more cuts could be on the horizon. Contract negotiations are ongoing with the teachers union.

The annual budget that was approved by Town Meeting included the $400,000 override which was subsequently voted down at a special election. Voters at a special town meeting this summer or early fall will be asked to approve an amended budget that reflects the reduction.

Two of the proposed teaching positions being cut — one grade one position and one high school English position — would have been added to this year's budget. No one had been hired for the positions, and therefore, no one will lose their jobs as a result of their being removed from the budget.

"The sun will come up tomorrow if one or two teachers aren't there," who have never been there in the first place, Flynn said.

However, Slanetz said, "It's a sad day when the majority of the school committee votes to reduce teachers."

Where the $168,000 came from

Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh said at the June 23 school committee meeting there is $168,000 that must be made up for underbudgeted teacher salaries. The increase is a result of salary changes for current employees as well as longevity buyouts and tuition reimbursement.

Walsh said since the budget was originally drafted in February, there have been a number of step increases and column changes, as well as staff being hired that were not in the original salary figure.

Step increases happen at the completion of every year of teaching, and increases for the past three years have typically been between $1,500 and $3,000 per teacher.

Column changes occur in addition to step increases as teachers continue to pursue their education. Teachers start off at column one with a bachelor's degree and progress through the columns as they earn credits or receive higher degrees. The average increase for a column change is between $1,000 and $2,000.

When column changes and step changes occur simultaneously, teachers have a double increase. For example, a first year teacher for the 2004-2005 school year, who increases one step with the completion of that first year, and who also receives a master's degree, or 30 credits in a field of study, would also move up to column two. The first year salary of $33,467 would jump over the summer to $37,822.

Walsh said since February, step increases and column changes have occurred which have thrown the salary balance off. According to the 2002-2005 teachers' contract, "Column transfers become effective on Sept. 1 and Jan. 31 following the date the teacher qualified for the change. To effect a salary change on Jan. 31, teachers will notify the superintendent of their eligibility for such change by the preceding Nov. 1."

While teachers must pay to take the classes which qualify them to make the column change, in Cohasset, they are entitled to receive some reimbursement. Walsh said tuition reimbursement for teachers has also affected the bottom line.

The teachers' contract says, "In order to receive reimbursement for a course, a teacher must apply for and receive approval (from the superintendent) for the course before April 15 of that year. Courses applied for after April 15 may be credited to the next fiscal year."

In addition, longevity buyouts have also affected the budget. Teachers who have 15 years of service in Cohasset may elect to receive $1,000 per year, commencing with the beginning of the 15th year of teaching. In addition, those teachers planning to retire are eligible to receive a longevity buyout of $3,000 per year for three consecutive years, during their last years of service, which is added to their salary. The contract says, "Applications for longevity buyouts are required no later than July 1 preceding the school year. Immediate placements are not ensured as the committee retains the right to set budget limits."

State aid change could benefit Cohasset coffers

Public urged to send letters

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Cohasset is a town that is looking for funding any way it can get it, and more may be possible if the town lobbies the state. Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh said the Department of Education and the Senate are working to reformulate the state law that divvies up state aid. She said Cohasset could benefit by roughly $600,000 if the change takes place.

Walsh and the school committee are asking the community to use the following letter as a template and send it to Sen. Robert Hedlund and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, to show the town's support for the new state aid formula which is being considered. Walsh said a vote on the change will be taking place soon, potentially within the next two weeks, and urges residents to send letters to the State House as soon as possible.

Sample letter:

It was reported in a June 12th Boston Globe article titled "Income Eyed for Funding Formula," that the Department of Education and the Senate, through a bill proposed by Senator Therese Murray, are working to reformulate how chapter 70 state aid is apportioned to communities.

The article stated that in addition to taking the median income of a community into consideration when determining a community's wealth, there is also a discussion that is taking place around whether local contributions to education should be capped. The Department of Education model caps the local contribution at 85%, thus guaranteeing at least 15% state aid. As a community that currently receives 10% from the state for education, Cohasset would greatly benefit from this revised formula. I urge you to explore Senator Murray's bill and the DOE proposal and to support an increase in state aid for education to your district.

Director of Finance Michael Buckley said currently, Cohasset receives less than 10 percent in state aid, and upping it to 15 percent would have a positive effect on the town's budget in the long run. He said it is his understanding the way the legislation is written, the changes would take place gradually over a period of roughly five years.

Letters should be sent to Robert Hedlund, Massachusetts Senate, State House, Room 413-F, Boston, MA 02133 and Garret Bradley, Massachusetts House of Representatives, State House, Room 472, Boston, MA 02133. A template for the letter can be found on the Cohasset school district Web site at www.cohassetk12.org. Click on the "template for distribution" link.

Report sheds light on school electrical use

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

With utility bills skyrocketing, finding ways to conserve energy is a top priority for the school department.

Throughout the school year, residents often voice concern over lights being on in both the school buildings and parking lots long after students are gone for the day. While lights are necessary while cleaning crews make their way through the buildings at night, some are concerned the lights are not being shut off when the buildings are not in use.

In late May, school committee chairman Jamie Williams asked facilities manager Brian Adams to begin looking into ways lighting could be limited, therefore cutting back on electricity and eliminating some of the glow for nearby neighbors. She said she had heard some negative comments from residents at various meetings in town.

"I am not satisfied with the feedback I'm getting on the lights," she said. "If they're on for no purpose, it's a waste of money."

Since then Adams, who was hired last fall, has been working with school committee member Pam Wilson to come up with a schedule for lighting which will help ensure only those lights which are absolutely necessary are on at any given time. Adams will be working with an energy consultant in the future to help devise a plan for the schools, and look at ways to conserve energy usage town-wide.

At the June 23 school committee meeting, Wilson shared a report compiled by Adams which detailed the amount of energy the schools currently use.

The parking lot lights are the most visible for those who drive by the schools at night or live in close proximity to them. Wilson said Adams has reviewed the lighting timers for all three schools and all have been set back. The Osgood and Deer Hill parking lot lights are scheduled to turn off at 11 p.m. and the middle-high school parking lot lights are set to turn off at 11:30 p.m.

Adams' report states the total electric bill for the schools for May was $22,323, of which 1.8 percent was the cost to light the parking lots. That means that while the parking lot lights may be more noticeable, it's the interior lights that are costing the most.

Previously, parking lot lights had been set to turn off at midnight. Assuming every light was previously on for four hours per day — from 8 p.m. until midnight — with 40 lights in the high school parking lot, and 34 lights at the Deer Hill and Osgood parking lots, the schools were paying roughly $13.43 per day, or $403.15 per month. All parking lot lights are 454 watt high-efficiency fixtures, which translates to .454 kilowatts per hour. The schools are charged roughly 10 cents per kilowatt hour, which equals 4.5 cents per hour per light.

With the change in time, the schools will now pay roughly $10.98 per day, or $329.40 per month, a savings of roughly $73.75 per month.

Adams' report states the total electric bill for the schools for May was $22,323, of which 1.8 percent was the cost to light the parking lots. That means that while the parking lot lights may be more noticeable, it's the interior lights that are costing the most.

The lights in the high school gymnasium are seemingly the worst interior offender, as 12 of the 40 total lights are designed to be on 24 hours per day, seven days per week, as emergency lights.

"To change this, the lights must be rewired and a shunt trip switch must be installed to allow the lights to come on automatically in a power failure situation," Adams' report states.

The cost to run the lights 24 hours per day is roughly $11.52 per day, which equals $345.60 per month. The cost to run the other 28 lights for roughly four hours per day is $4.48 per day, or $134.40 per month. Together, all lights for the gym total $480 per month.

Adams' report says all other interior lights in all three buildings will be shut off when cleaning crews leave. In addition, his report states he is "working with the electrician that installed the timer at the high school to further control lighting. I am also meeting with an energy consultant to review energy usage town-wide."

Flashback: While electricity did pose a problem for the fiscal 2005 budget, as only $14,000 was budgeted and $22,000 was spent, other bills posed a much larger problem.

Last June, days before the close of fiscal 2004, then school committee chairman Rick Shea was informed by former Supt. Edward Malvey — just days before he entered temporary retirement — the town needed to pay a $93,000 gas bill, which had been sent to the town around the end of April or early May.

Upon receiving the bill, Malvey spoke with Keyspan and reached an agreement where the schools would be allowed to defer the bill for a while, and pay it in installments over a six-month period. However, director of finance Michael Buckley said under state law, bills incurred in one fiscal year cannot be paid with funds from another, and paying the bill was required to be voted on at Town Meeting. Fortunately, voters passed its payment, as well as an additional $93,000 to be added to the fiscal 2005 budget, as it was evident the recommended figures would not be adequate.

In addition, unbudgeted employment costs surfaced in the amount of $65,000 for fiscal 2004, and they too were voted on to be paid as an unpaid bill, with an additional $65,000 added to the fiscal 2005 budget. An additional $200,000 was also added to fiscal 2005, on top of the passage of a $400,000 override, which also subsidized the school budget.

Boot camp training for school committee floated

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

At the suggestion of Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh, members of the school committee may soon sign up to attend a leadership conference.

With only one longtime member on the board, two new members who began in April, and two others with one year of experience — Walsh said the time is right to attend an informational meeting.

"When boards change over, certain things change," she said, adding she is willing to contact the appropriate offices to arrange for members to attend a conference designed specifically for new school committee members.

Walsh said the conferences deal with communication and meeting procedures, "And that's where we lost it last week."

Walsh's comments came on the heels of a tension-filled June 16 meeting which saw the school committee divided among itself during budget discussions.

When answering a question posed by Selectman Ralph Dormitzer regarding his position on proposed budget cuts, member Rick Flynn was cut off by chairman Jamie Williams who said he was not staying within the topic set for meeting discussion. Flynn then rebutted, "are you the only one who gets to speak?"

When member Adrienne MacCarthy was asked if she wanted to speak on the matter, she replied she had wanted to, but hesitated after seeing Flynn cut off so abruptly. However, she went on to explain her position.

Last week, member Pam Wilson said during the meeting on the 16th, she wasn't comfortable with the tone of the meeting and therefore didn't actively voice her opinion.

"I don't do well with negative conversations, so I didn't contribute a lot," she said June 23, one week later. "We need to be united as a group." Wilson said the committee as a whole has not been standing behind the school administration which has proposed budget cuts it feels are in the best interest of the schools. She added she is very uncomfortable with the way conversations have gone among board members and wants more effective communication.

"We need to be united as a group."
— Pam Wilson, school committee

The school committee has been discussing ways to help balance the school budget, which has required they find a good deal of funds. On one side of the budget discussions were Williams and vice chairman Alfred Slanetz who both feel cutting teaching positions to balance the budget, as was proposed by Supt. Walsh, is not an option to be considered.

While Walsh said all spending in the schools has a direct affect on the classroom and all spending impacts education, both Williams and Slanetz feel there is some money in the budget which is discretionary. That money can be used — along with revenue from potentially increasing fees in the cafeteria or implementing transportation fees, or other fees to be determined — to keep those teaching positions.

"Anything in the class is sacred and everything else is support. We would be happy to have a good building, but we would be happier to have frozen pipes and a great teacher," Slanetz said.

On the other side were MacCarthy, Flynn, and Wilson, who agreed with Walsh that all school spending does go hand-in-hand, and that the town was given the option of voting on the override and it voted against increasing taxes. Implementing fees is essentially a tax only on those who have children in the schools and that is not what they think the town voted for. While they have said no one likes the thought of cutting teaching positions, that's the only way to close the budget gap.

Flynn said when the town agreed to pay for the school building projects, a promise was made that the new buildings would be maintained. He said he can't in good conscience allow the buildings to fall apart, but keep two teaching positions which do not currently exist, and two positions which are not in this year's budget because they have been privately funded.

MacCarthy agreed and said, "Not one of us feels cutting teachers is an appropriate step. But, we owe respect to the principals, department heads, and staff who said the least effect on classes would be cutting those four positions. No one came back here thrilled to tell us that," she said.

At the June 23 meeting, Wilson said she sided with MacCarthy and Flynn and said while she appreciates the suggestions made by Slanetz and Williams, which could potentially increase revenue in the future, "They can't be done immediately." She said she would like to see the board set goals for the future and analyze its options, but added, "We can't make a decision in one night that will affect the entire community."

The school committee is currently in phase two of its budget balancing act. A budget that included a $400,000 operating budget override passed muster with the first round of voters at Town Meeting, but ultimate approval comes at the ballot box where it was voted down. The town and schools have split the $400,000 difference, and the school's portion is $285,000.

However, there is an anticipated roughly $105,000 coming in from special education reimbursements, which would be used to help close the gap, potentially leaving the school department with $180,000 to make up.

School dept. welcomes new business manager

Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh announced June 23 the school department has a new full-time business manager in David DeGennaro, who will come on board full-time as of Aug. 15. DeGennaro will replace current interim business manager Joe McDonald whom Walsh previously worked with in Middleborough.

DeGennaro comes to Cohasset from Achusnet where he served as the school business manager since 2001. He holds and undergraduate degree from UMass Boston and an MBA in account finance.

There has been a significant amount of turnover in the business manager office at Cohasset High School. Last summer, Ivan Klimko resigned from the position which he had held since 2001.

At the beginning of the 2004-2005 school year, Karen Park came on board part-time until February. Having worked with McDonald before, Walsh asked him to temporarily come out of retirement to help out on an interim basis in Cohasset. McDonald will remain at the school part-time until DeGennaro comes on board.

Legion baseball on the rise

By Joel Racicot
CORRESPONDENT

Like a good rack of ribs, the Cohasset Post 118 Legion baseball program has been slow cooking for some time.

Still simmering on low, it's time to at least set the table, if not invite the dinner guests.

Taking some time to come to fruition as a program, this year's team now boasts two future Division One college players. It has one proven college talent, and an abundance of possible future high school all-stars and collegiate players.

More importantly, they have come together on the baseball field to compete. During previous legion seasons, competing against some of the top legion teams in the area just wasn't realistic.

"We've taken a big step in rebuilding this program," said head coach Mike O'Brien. "We were just totally not in games from the first inning on in previous seasons. We just didn't have the players."

This season, Cohasset is 3-8-1 overall, but with a league boasting bigger team's from Milton, Weymouth and Canton, 3-8-1 is just a number.

It all starts with four-year Cohasset Legion players Teddie Straughn and Terrence O'Brien. Straughn is headed to Boston College on a baseball scholarship to pitch. O'Brien is headed to Northwestern Oklahoma State on a baseball scholarship to play catcher.

"Without question we're just getting our stuff together. We have one of the best defenses, and as far as pitching goes we're as deep as anyone."
Legion coach Mike O'Brien

Toss in Scotty Carroll, who started at Union College in New York as a freshman, and this team has veteran leadership. And its presence is rubbing off on the impressionable.

"The kids look up to them," said O'Brien. "They are great leaders."

Ryan Ferriter, Tim McGrath and Mike Signorelli are reaping the benefits of playing with such leadership.

"Those guys [Ferriter, McGrath, Signorelli] are going

Lady laxers aim for tourney success in '06

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset girls lacrosse team has become a regular in the state tournament.

In 2006, the program will be looking to take the next step: winning at least one postseason game.

That has been a challenge the last few years for the Skippers, with the latest setback coming to Hingham four weeks ago in a Div. 2 South first round matchup.

Head coach Torin Sweeney says involvement in year-round programs, such as MassELITE, is critical to whether his team can get over the postseason hump.

The coach is hopeful that his team's play in the second half of the year, in which they went 6-1 (with the only loss coming to Div. 2 state champion Norwell), will be the norm for the entire season next year.

"We just started to execute our gameplan. Our transition game was a lot better, and we got a lot more fast-break goals as a result," Sweeney said. "Everyone was doing exactly what they needed to do, from the forwards to the midfield and defense."

There is plenty of talent returning to the 2006 team, and they will need to play up to their capabilities as Cohasset has graduated five seniors vital to the success of this year's team.

Lauren Rizzotti and Mackenzie Holway were the Skippers' Pilgrim Conference All-Stars this year. Rizzotti was the team's leading scorer with 67 points (53 goals, 14 assists), and the emergence of Holway as a two-way force in the midfield

Local MaxLax team wins New England tournament

COURTESY PHOTO

The Championship roster included: Jeff Brown, Charlie Czerkawski, Chris Davis, Mike Bunstein, Bobby Meikleham, Jake Cuneo, Peter Ernst, Mark Flibotte, Chris Mills, Ryan Kucinski, Pete Oswald, Brendan Hughes, Pete Hanson, Nate Porter, "Rolly" St. Claire-Barrie, Zach Gray, and Alex Shipp, with coaches Bill Gray and Curt Mills.

While Mother Nature turned up the heat big time this past weekend, over 40 of the hottest lax teams in New England showed up at Milton Academy to test their skills in the 3rd annual MaxLax Invitational Lacrosse Tournament.

This year's field for this "best of the best" championship event was the largest ever and featured youth and high school level teams from all over the area including Rhode Island, New Hampshire and many of the perennial lax powerhouses from our area including, Cohasset, Duxbury, Marshfield, and Hingham.

Local Select Team Takes Top Honors

The MaxLax JV ProShots team ignored the summer heat while their fiery play on the field left their opponents wishing they had gone to the beach instead, as they not only swept their divisional rounds, but dominated the championship game to take home the trophies and top prizes as the 2005 MaxLax JV Champions.

This select group of highly skilled laxers included ninth- and tenth-graders from Cohasset, Scituate, and Andover (formerly of Cohasset), who put on a powerful display of precision passing, collegiate level team play, and a constant barrage of sniper-like shots that often left the other teams shaking their heads in disbelief.

While they had a tough contest against arch-rival Hingham in the mid-round, the ProShots caught fire to keep their winning streak alive and advance to the finals where they dominated both sides of the field to easily work their way past Marblehead for the final victory.

For most of these players, winning it all is getting to be old hat as many of them have played together in the past and are undefeated in tournament play and will need more space for their trophies if this keeps up.

Boys tennis All-Scholastics

Cohasset's Nils Sceery, Chris Pescatore and Chris Donze have been named to the 2005 Mariner All-Scholastics team for boys tennis.

Mariner All-Scholastics are chosen from the public high schools of Marinerland's 13 towns: Abington, Braintree, Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Holbrook, Kingston, Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Rockland, Scituate and Weymouth.

Next week, we publish our All-Scholastic girls tennis team.

Cohasset's Nils Sceery is one of the area's top singles players, and again makes the Mariner All-Scholastic boys tennis team.

Singles

Nils Sceery - Junior
First singles - Cohasset

After going 14-4 at second singles last year, moved up to the first spot this season and had similar success…Won matches in the preliminary and first rounds of the Div. 2 state team tournament to help lead to the Skippers to a spot in the sectional quarterfinals…A South Shore League All-Star this season…Went 8-2 in the league, with only losses coming to Norwell's Ryan Sweeney…The second of those matches went to a third set, and both were very competitive…A big, strong athlete who punishes the ball from the baseline and entertains the crowd with his vocal reactions to winners…Will co-captain a team next year that returns all seven of its regulars from this season's 17-6 squad…Also plays soccer for Cohasset High School

Brandon Luttinger - Junior (Capt.)
First singles - Hingham

Brandon Luttinger

After receiving an Honorable Mention last spring, Luttinger is making his first appearance on the All-Scholastic squad…This talented No. 1 player helped Hingham return to postseason play after a year's absence…Luttinger went 12-6 overall on the season and 9-3 in the Patriot League, second to only Duxbury's No. 1 Peter Anton (ranked 13 in New England)…His consistent play on the singles courts guided the Harbormen to an 11-5 overall mark, 9-4 slate in all of the PL, and 6-2 in their own East Div., finishing second behind only Duxbury…In the tourney, Luttinger won a match against Dighton-Rehoboth leading the team to the next round, where they fell to North Attleboro…At the team's banquet this past weekend, Luttinger received the Joe Massi Patriot League Sportsmanship Award and was cited as having the "Best Match of the Year" when he rallied from a 3-9 deficit in a Pro-Set match to defeat his Cohasset opponent, 11-9…Luttinger also plays soccer and basketball at HHS and will return to all three teams next year. Hingham coach Ron Bartels: "Brandon has great mental toughness and a great heart. He's a fantastic kid and is effortless to coach."

Ryan Sweeney - Sophomore
First singles - Norwell

Ryan Sweeney

Followed up an impressive freshman campaign at second singles with an even better year in the top spot…Went undefeated (16-0) on the year…Also advanced to the South sectional's final eight in the individuals tournament, joining athletes from elite programs like Wellesley and Sharon…Hasn't lost a South Shore League match in his two years at Norwell High School…League All-Star this season…Won two very competitive matches with fellow All-Scholastic Nils Sceery of Cohasset, with the second match going three sets…Noticeably improved his game over the last year in the eyes of his coach…A baseline warrior who simply runs everything down and gets it back over net…Also showed a stronger serve this season…Played golf and JV basketball for Norwell this year…Clippers coach Jay Swartz: "Ryan has been fantastic for us for two years. It's his intelligence and all-court game that separate him from others."

Rob Ankner - Freshman
Second singles - Norwell

Rob Ankner

If Sweeney was the freshman sensation in 2004, it was Ankner in '05…Was undefeated in South Shore League play this season, and lost only once overall, to Duxbury star Brian Love…Didn't just win; he dominated, as few matches event went to a third set…Proved he could hang with first singles players from strong programs when he defeated fellow All-Scholastic Brandon Luttinger of Hingham in the first round of the state individuals tournament…League All-Star this season…Displays maturity beyond his years on the tennis court…Figures to combine with Sweeney to form a very strong 1-2 punch at the top of Norwell's lineup for two more years…Clippers coach Jay Swartz: "Rob was very patient and very consistent all year. He showed a willingness to play long points and wait until the right opportunity. He was not impatient, like a lot of freshmen tend to be."

Brad Anderson - Senior
First singles - Scituate

Big, strong player who had tendency to play better as his matches went on…Perhaps in no match was that more evident than April 25 against fellow All-Scholastic Geoff Anderson of Silver Lake, where Brad lost his first set (4-6) and then lost only three games over the final two sets to take the match…That win clinched a big league victory that day…Defeated All-Scholastic Honorable Mention Kyle Opie of Braintree in first round of individuals tournament this season…Played well against Norwell star Ryan Sweeney, taking him to three sets in the first outing…This is Brad's second straight appearance on the Mariner All-Scholastic team

Geoffrey Ramsay - Senior
First singles - Silver Lake

A station wagon in a fleet of sports cars…May not have possessed the glitz and glamour of some of his Patriot League opponents, but often hauled around a Silver Lake squad left bare when Pembroke left the regional school district…Adjusted to a new coach, new teammates and his new responsibilities as team leader. Hit the daily double by earning Patriot League all-star honors for his play the court as well as a Patriot League sportsmanship award. Played No. 1 singles and wore down lesser foes with his focus and patience on the baseline.

Doubles

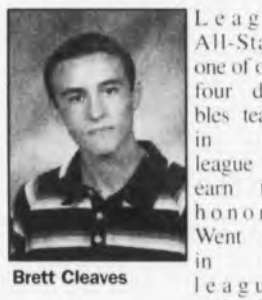
Chris Pescatore/Chris Donze
First doubles - Cohasset

"The Chrises" came up large in the second half of the season and in the state team tournament to give the Skippers a solid presence in the doubles department…Were as clutch as it gets in the tournament, as both of Cohasset's first two matches came down to them, and they earned the point to help their advance both times…Scored their biggest regular season win of the year against Hingham's Tom and Walt O'Donnell in late May, after losing to the same team earlier in the season…Defeated Norwell's Gabe Weeks and Brett Cleaves (also All-Scholastics) in the teams' second match on May 12, earning Cohasset's only point on the afternoon…One of four South Shore League All-Star doubles teams…Pescatore will join Sceery and Dan Sullivan as senior co-captains on next year's team; Donze, a junior-to-be, also returns to a Skippers team that should again contend for a South Shore League title

Tom O'Donnell/Walt O'Donnell -
First Doubles - Hingham

These talented brothers had another impressive season and are making their second-straight appearance on the All-Scholastic team…Senior captain Tom and junior Walt were again one of the Patriot League's better doubles teams, going 7-5 in a talent-loaded PL (9-6 overall)…The duo split decisions with the doubles teams from Scituate and Cohasset and topped a highly regarded Norwell pair, all fellow All-Scholastics…The O'Donnell brothers were also one of only a few doubles teams to take Duxbury's talented No. 1 duo to three sets…Their consistent play on the doubles front helped the Harbormen reach the postseason after a year's absence, going 11-5 overall (9-4 in all of the PL, 6-2 in their own East Div., finishing second to Duxbury)…The duo won the first match of the postseason, pacing Hingham to a 5-0 victory over Dighton-Rehoboth, before being bounced by North Attleboro in the next round…Also a football player at HHS, Tom is the lone senior departing the young tennis squad…Walt will return as a captain next season to either play doubles with a new partner or try his hand at singles. Hingham coach Ron Bartels: "They're one of the best doubles tandems we've had. Over the last three years, they've been extremely consistent as far as winning records. They're very hard workers who take the game seriously."

Joe McCarthy/Craig Parker
First doubles - Scituate



When the Sailors duo was on top of their game, they were very hard to beat…Beat a strong first doubles team from Norwell (Gabe Weeks and Brett Cleaves, also All-Scholastics) in both outings between the schools this season…Split with Hingham's All-Scholastic tandem of Tom and Walt O'Donnell…One of their best matches came against Hanover's Jamie Fitzgerald and Derek Quinzani in April; after losing the first set, the Scituate pair won the next two, 6-2 and 6-3, to take the match…With their team needing a win in the season finale against Cohasset to make the state team tournament, both came up big to lead their team to victory. Parker defeated South Shore League All-Star Dan Sullivan at second singles; McCarthy, with new partner Andrew Mackay, won at first doubles…Both will return to what should be a solid Scituate team next year; McCarthy will be a senior, Parker a junior

Gabe Weeks/Brett Cleaves
First doubles - Norwell

In their first season playing together, Weeks and Cleaves had a solid year, carrying an undefeated record deep into the season…South Shore League All-Stars, one of only four doubles teams in the league to earn that honor…Went 9-1 in the league, with their only loss coming to a strong Cohasset duo (Chris Pescatore and Chris Donze) on May 12…Cleaves, who earned Mariner All-Scholastic Honorable Mention last year as a second doubles partner with Scott Kitchen (who moved up to third singles this season), figures to be a first doubles standout again next season to be the nucleus over the next three or four years," O'Brien said.

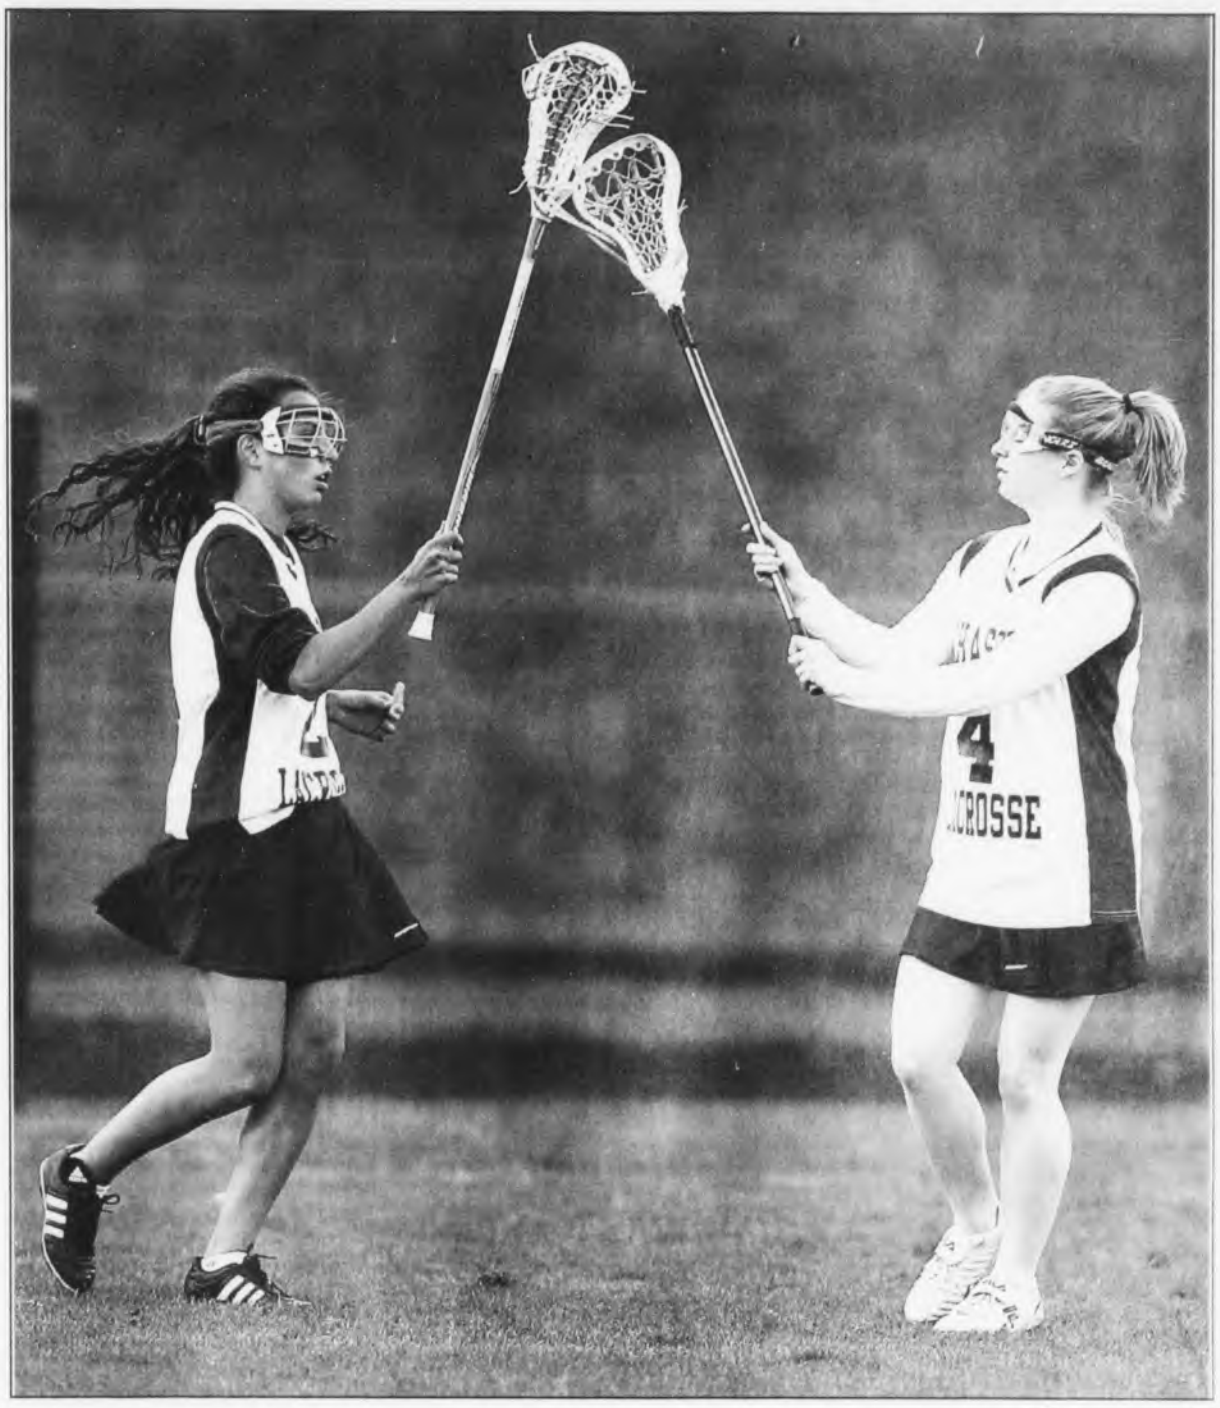
Now, a little over halfway through the season, Cohasset looks to improve throughout the rest of the summer.



"Without question we're just getting our stuff together," said O'Brien. "We have one of the best defenses, and as far as pitching goes we're as deep as anyone."

This past week, Cohasset went 0-3. On Wednesday, they lost to a tough Canton team 7-5. On Friday, they were defeated by Weymouth 17-5, and Milton won 9-0 on Monday. Both Milton and Weymouth were undefeated when they played Cohasset.

was a pleasant development for the Skippers.

"Mackenzie really brought her game to another level this year," Sweeney said. "She played so well, offensively and defensively."

The Skippers also graduate three significant contributors on the defensive end: Molly Kirk, Miranda Lanzillotti and Danielle Hajjar. Kirk was a midfielder who found her way to just about every part of the field during the course of a game, but did her best work when on defense.

Lanzillotti was the team's top defender, and she and Rizzotti were the team's captains this season.

"I thought the senior leadership was excellent this year," Sweeney said.

As for next year, Cohasset returns its second- and third-leading scorers from this season in Lindsay Durkin and Lisa Spirito. Durkin scored 38 goals this year, as she and Spirito will be counted on for a strong 1-2 punch up front.

Others who will figure prominently in the Skippers attack next year are juniors-to-be Kara Wilcox, Emily Coggins and Caren Garber. Wilcox scored three goals in a late-season game against Plymouth.

"I think Kara will be a new-found force on offense for us," said Sweeney.

Defensively, Cohasset returns starter Marissa Evans, who next year will be a senior co-captain, along with Cassie Rosano and Mia Lieb-Lappen. Those who will be seeing increased playing time on defense include Colleen Richardson, Tessa Leahy and Haley Haracz, all of whom will be playing in front of goalie Joanna Hamilton.

Sweeney says he was particularly impressed with what he saw from Leahy, who was called up from the JV team in mid-season.

"She showed some real good skills; she certainly showed that she can play at this level," Sweeney said.

Northeastern Basketball Camp

Northeastern University Men's Basketball will be hosting two summer basketball camps for boys ages 7 to 17 at the Cabot Gym on the Northeastern University Campus in Boston. The first week of camp will be June 27th to July 1st. The second week of camp will be August 1st to 5th.

YOUTH LACROSSE REPORT

Editor's Note: The following is the 13-and-Under Jamboree weekend report, intended for last week's Mariner. It is running in its entirety this week.

13-and-Under girls (grades 5 and 6)

The Cohasset 5th and 6th grade crew started the Jamboree weekend with two wins and a loss on Saturday.

In the opener, Cohasset dominated a shorthanded Quincy squad and cruised to a 10-5 win, as eight different players scored goals. Olivia Murphy was the only player to score twice, but she had ample help from Bridget Cahill, Hope Kissick, Kathleen Kelly, Madeline Manning, Danielle Healy, Molly McElgunn, Christina Healy and Scarlett McQuade all chipped in with solo scores. McQuade's goal was her first on the season.

Stephanie Brierly, who played her best ball of the season at the end of the year, stopped five shots to get the win in the net.

Next, the girls played a Pembroke squad that had dominated Cohasset's White team 11-8 during the regular season. This time, however, it was Cohasset in charge, controlling the game and rolling to a 9-2 win.

Hope Kissick and Whitney Jaffe both scored twice – with Jaffe notching her first goal shooting lefthanded and the second with her right hand – and Olivia Murphy, Merrick Sease, Jessica Fusco, Marie Gilman and Moira Donohue added solo scores. For both Gilman and Donohue, the scores were their first of the season.

Molly McElgunn made four saves in the Cohasset net to pick up the win.

Finally on Saturday, Cohasset faced a Sandwich team that had tied the Blue team earlier in the season. This time, however, Sandwich controlled the contest and won by a count of 6-2. Molly McElgunn and Jessica Fusco scored the Cohasset goals, and Ellie Tedeschi made three saves under a steady onslaught of Sandwich shots.

On Sunday, June 19, the girls returned to the Jamboree for a strikingly similar two-win, one-loss day. The girls started the day by rolling over Hanover 6-2. Olivia Muprhy, Molly McElgunn, Hope Kissick, Whitney Jaffe and Missy Sease scored first-half goals, with Lindsey MacNaught adding a second-half marker as Cohasset cruised. Stephanie Brierly made two saves to get the win in net.

Next, Cohasset controlled a tough Scituate team, en route to a 5-1 win. Sease opened the scoring on a direct-free position, and Kissick did the same to answer a Scituate goal. In the second half, McElgunn scored twice and Eliza Kinnealey finished a strong rush up from her defensive position to close out the scoring. Ellie Tedeschi stopped three shots – and the hearts of the coaches with some wild rushes up the field – to get the win.

In the final game, Cohasset dropped a tough one to a Duxbury 3 team made up entirely of 6th-grade students. Moira Donohue's second goal of the weekend gave Cohasset a tie in the first half, but Kissick's goal was not enough to keep pace with Duxbury's two scores, and Cohasset dropped a 3-2 decision. Molly McElgunn stopped four shots in the loss.

Girls youth lacrosse season recap

The 2005 spring lacrosse season saw the Cohasset girls program extend a short record of excellence and dominance on the field.

Cohasset's 15-and-Under girls (grades 7 and 8) combined for a final record of 21-1-1, with the younger 13-and-Under girls (grades 5 and 6) finishing the season with a combined record of 19-7-1.

Two girls at each age level made the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League All-Star team, with Gabriella Flibotte and Maura Barnes making the leagues 15-U all-star team, while Kaci Kucinski and Anna Michalowski played in the National Junior Lacrosse Festival for the MBYLL's 13-and-Under team.

Flibotte closed out her impressive youth lacrosse career with an amazing 175 goals and 14 assists for a total of 189 points. Isabelle Franklin moved into second place on the girls all-time scoring list, and became the second Cohasset player to surpass the 50-goal plateau; she currently has 62 goals and 6 assist on her youth lacrosse career.

Maura Barnes' 15 career assists are tops in that category; she added 49 goals during her youth lacrosse career, and her 64 total points stands in third place all-time for the girls program.

In the goal for the 13-U girls, Molly McElgunn led the way, making 49 stops against 42 goals for a .538 save percentage. Ellie Tedeschi stopped an even half of the 62 shots on goal that she faced, while Stephanie Brierly made 20 saves against 21 goals. Anna Michalowski made 13 saves against 15 goals, and Sarah Evans, Whitney Jaffe and Bridget Cahill saw spot action in the net, combining for five saves against four goals.

The future for 2006 looks bright too. Nine of the top 20 scorers in the four-year history of the program will be back next year, promising another season of big scores for the home team and rough times for the opposition.

Tap Room wins second Vail title; Cohasset resident instrumental in win

For the second time in three years, the Tap Room/Atlantic Sportswear team has captured the SuperMasters title at the Vail Lacrosse shootout, with Cohasset resident Chuck Jaffe backstopping the team to victory.

Jaffe, the team's only goaltender, posted two shutouts and gave up just 12 goals in the team's seven games en route to the title. The tournament was played from Sunday, June 26 through Tuesday, June 28 in Vail, Colorado.

"Overall, the goaltending in the tournament was outstanding," said Tap Room coach Carle Buckley. "But any time you give up less than two goals a game and stop virtually everything thrown at you, you've given your team a great chance to win.

"This is the best tournament for 40-and-over players in the world, and Chuck can now say he has won it twice. Not many goalies will ever be able to say that."

Jaffe joined the Tap Room/Atlantic Sportswear team in 2003, when the team became the first one sponsored by a Vail-based business to win the title. Last year, the team was eliminated in the semi-finals, but this year the squad bounced back and posted a perfect 7-0 record.

The Tap Room team defeated the Air Force Gray Birds 5-0, Middlebury Alums 4-1, WOOFs 9-0, the Elder Statesmen 4-3 in Sunday's pool play. The team then knocked off the Princeton Obsoletes 5-1 in quarterfinal action and the FROGs (Florida Really Old Guys) 9-1 in the semis.

Tap Room played the Elder Statesmen – a group of Hobart College alums – again in the final. The Tap Room held a 7-6 lead entering the fourth quarter, when Jaffe shut the door for good, and Tap Room rolled out to an 11-6 final.

The Tap Room is a bar and club in Vail; Atlantic Sportswear is the leading sports apparel/uniform maker in the Northeast.

Taking time to listen for silence

FAITH REFLECTIONS

FR. JOHN G. MAHERAS

Have you ever taken time to walk to the seashore and sit on the soft sand? Have you thought of going to the lighthouse and sitting on a rock and gazing out at the ocean?

Try it. Today! Find some time and go and sit by the ocean side and listen. Shut out the noises that come from the land and listen to the silence that comes across the ocean. All is still.

And in this stillness, this silence, you will notice it is all pervading, everywhere, the very essence of your own soul. Occasionally, you may hear the distant sound of a boat; this serves to punctuate the intensity of the quietness. You may hear someone walking nearby, the laughter of a child, the soft splashing of the waves on the shore; these are loud and startling sounds that merely emphasize the immense stillness.

Often you may choose to get up and walk to enjoy the silence, the stillness of nature, the quietude of the holy, sensing that the ocean is speaking to you in its silence. You feel within your soul that the message within the silence is to be taken to heart, to be listened to, to be heeded.

You may walk along and in the silence of yourself, want to talk, because many of us have not learned the art of silence. Many of us have this need to constantly hear noises. We get in our car and turn on the radio. We enter our homes and turn on the television, the stereo just to hear sounds. We walk around with our i-pods, stereo-earphone stuck in our ear, CD playing on our computer as we work, because our own silence can be so deafening. For you see we have this mistaken idea that if we hear noises and sounds, we are connected to the world, we are attached with the person or the musicians. Plus, when we don't hear sounds, we think and that is what frightens many of us; thinking.

We walk around with our i-pods, stereo-earphone stuck in our ear, CD playing on our computer as we work, because our own silence can be so deafening.

Scripture tells us, a couple of things about our own silence. There is a time to be silent and a time to speak up. Overall though, "a silent person is a throne of perceptiveness" Proverbs tells us. We must admit that we have the spirit of talkativeness. And behind our talkativeness lurks lying, loose speech, absurd conversations, gossip, general buffoonery, and tremendous waste of time; for it profits nothing. Indeed, we shall have to give an accounting not only of our deeds but also what we have said. Thus silence is most necessary and profitable.

So take a trip to the seashore or sit in a room or in your backyard and be still. Strive to work for that state of inner tranquility or mental quietude and concentration on silence. Push out of your mind all thoughts, all images, all ideas, and listen for silence. In conjunction with this silence, with this stillness, practice prayer, a simple prayer that can bring you more silence. Guard your heart and soul and your intellect with silence for in this silence you will find that your thoughts become clearer, your heart will beat with a quieter and slower rhythm and your soul will regain its serenity. Above all, the joy of listening to silence is that you are opening yourself up to God so He can join you in your silence and you can have an openness towards Him. Perfect silence alone proclaims God and ushers us into His presence and our soul becomes His dwelling place as the temple of the Holy Spirit.

Fr. John G. Maheras is Pastor of the Nativity of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church, Cohasset. This is one in a monthly series by members of the Cohasset Clergy Association.

Fourth of July offers great fun next door in Hingham

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

The town is gearing up for its traditional Fourth of July celebration with great anticipation and high hopes for a sunny, mild day. Many former Hingham residents return to their hometown year after year to enjoy the parade and surrounding activities with family members and friends.

Thousands more enjoy the parade, many of them festively decked out in red, white, and blue.

Holiday-related activities include:

• Friday, July 1 – an old-fashioned band concert at the Gazebo at Hingham Harbor, featuring the Satuit Band, 7:30 p.m.

• Sat., July 2 (rain date is July 3) –Spectacular fireworks at Hingham Harbor, sponsored by the Hingham Lions Club. Entertainment begins at 5:30 p.m. at the Bathing Beach off Rte. 3A. Vendors will offer fried dough, fresh lemonade, sausage, and other food items, a 50/50 raffle, and "the best fireworks display on the South Shore" beginning at dusk. Proceeds benefit Lion Club charities. July 4th T-shirts will also be sold to raise money for eye research.

Fourth of July hotline: (781) 804-2399.

• Mon., July 4 – 7 a.m., Hingham Road Race, sponsored by the Friends of the Hingham Recreation Commission, begins at the middle school, 1103 Main St. More than 1,800 runners normally run the 4.6-mile course down historic Main Street, finishing under the giant American flag in Hingham Square; 7 to 10 a.m., Hingham-Weymouth Kiwanis Club pancake breakfast on Hingham Common; parade, featuring Uncle Sam, bands, floats, antique cars, and more steps out rain or shine from Hingham High School at 10 a.m., ending at Station Street. This year's theme is "Hingham — Home Sweet Home."

The theme couldn't be more appropriate, notes Hingham Fourth of July Parade Committee Chairman Mary Ann Blackmur. "This will be a great parade — truly a town celebration. The parade wouldn't be possible without the support of the community, parade committee members, the Hingham Police and Fire Departments, the department of public works, and all those who participate in the fund raising," Blackmur said. "This is a huge community effort, and the committee wishes everyone a safe and happy Fourth of July."

Floats line up on Pleasant Street and bands and walking groups in the parking lot at the front of the high school leading toward Pleasant Street. All motor vehicles line up around the back of the high school leading toward Pleasant Street. Band transportation should wait at Station Street. Participants should be at high school by 8 a.m.

Volunteers who are willing to walk with the parade on that day to help move participants along and to create a smooth parade flow are needed. For further information, call (781) 749-5946.

Parade buttons will be sold along the parade route by the Rotary Club for $1 to help raise funds for future parades. Fund raising is not allowed except in support of the parade.

Candy throwing from floats or vehicles is not allowed for safety reasons. Because the annual event draws a large crowd, arriving early and avoiding parking along the parade route is recommended.

Visit the town website – www.hingham-ma.com – for more information about Hingham's Fourth of July celebration and the road race.

Or call the Fourth of July hotline for a run-down of the weekend's events and the latest parade route information, (781) 804-2399.

Kids wave from Hingham's North Street Family Association float in last year's parade. This year's parade starts at 10 a.m. Monday, July 4.

The fireworks and family fair at Hingham Harbor are always a big draw. This year's fireworks are Saturday (rain date is Sunday).

Old Ship hosts July 4th picnic

Old Ship Church once again is hosting a Fourth of July picnic on the front lawn of the Parish House on Hingham's Main Street. That shady expanse, under large, leafy trees offers the perfect vantage point to watch the town's famous parade, with its collection of beautiful floats, exciting marching bands and vintage autos.

As the marchers pass by, spectators can enjoy a brunch-style repast, including breakfast sandwiches, hotdogs and sausages, topped with sauerkraut or any other condiment you might desire, as well as a variety of cold drinks. Large slices of icy watermelon will help keep the heat at bay.

Old Ship, considerably older than the country at 325 years, is the perfect place in which to remember our history and to celebrate the courage, vision and hard work that gave our ancestors the strength to win our independence.

Because the parade this year is back to its usual starting time, Old Ship will begin serving at 9:30 a.m.

Last year's picnic was a huge success, as families, friends and neighbors enjoyed each other's company, good food, and the parade that reminds us all of our common heritage and hopes for the future in this great land of ours.

Let's do it again!

Police pursue erratic driver

A car with three white males driving erratically and passing vehicles on Beach Street Saturday evening resulted in a police pursuit through two towns.

Police broke off the pursuit when it became apparent the erratic driver could put public safety at risk.

Police Chief James Hussey said when an officer confronts an erratic driver it's not always clear what may have occurred. There could be alcohol involved or the individual could be fleeing a crime scene.

Hussey said the car continued toward Jerusalem Road then down Hull Street (Rte. 228) and into Hingham where the pursuit was turned over to Hingham, although the Cohasset cruiser continued to follow.

Based on the way the operator was driving, both officers made the decision to terminate the pursuit near Queen Ann's Corner.

A notice with a description of the vehicle and plate number was sent out to other police departments.

The next day Rockland police recovered the vehicle that had been abandoned on a resident's property. Cohasset police took custody of the vehicle, which had not been reported stolen.

"We're talking to the owner and the matter is under investigation," Hussey said.

It is still not clear why the men were speeding through town. There had not been any reports of a crime occurring before the incident.

"Officers weigh the pros and cons before pursuing a vehicle," Hussey said, saying the safety of the public is always the main consideration.

The King James edition

Comedian and sitcom star plays Music Circus July 3

With his hit CBS-TV series, "The King of Queens," about to begin production on its 8th season, roles in five upcoming feature films and his first baby on the way, Kevin James is one seriously busy man. He's a famously funny one, too, which he'll demonstrate on Sunday when he brings his stand-up act to the South Shore Music Circus.

"I love to tour, but it's getting harder to find the time. There are so many projects coming up, I'm just not sure when I'll get to take my act out after these dates," explained James by telephone last week.

His long-running sitcom about a blue-collar couple from Queens, N.Y., is just one of the reasons that the comic who was first discovered at the 1996 Montreal Comedy Festival has such a full calendar. His burgeoning movie career - including a co-starring role, opposite Will Smith, in the hit film "Hitch" - is another. With one film ("Monster House") in post-production, another ("Barnyard") filming, and three more in the works, the Stony Brook, N.Y., native is likely to be spending more time on film sets than in comedy clubs in the future.

"We're working on a bunch of film projects and I'm looking at even more beyond that," says James, 40, who celebrated his first anniversary with his wife, model Steffiana De La Cruz, on June 19, and who admits that his personal life has long been fodder for his act. "For me, my material has always been about the little things that annoy me. I never drew my comedy from struggle. Now that things are going well for me, the comedy still comes from the little things in life."

Those little things have resonated in a big way with audiences since James began his comedy career 11 years ago. "My act is clean, because that's the way we were brought up. Dirty comics crack me up, but my own act is more universal. You can't do dirty jokes on television either, which makes that kind of material more limiting."

For the former Cortland University football fullback, fame has come with reason. "Recognition is great, but you also have to realize that people won't always recognize you. It's pretty tough, however, to get upset with people when they're coming to you to tell you how much they enjoy your work. It means less pressure when you work live, too, because at least now audiences know who they are coming to see and they're excited. They're on your side, but you still have to make them laugh."

Kevin James will perform at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Solier Street, Cohasset, Sunday, July 3 at 7:30 p.m. For tickets and information, call 617-931-2787 or visit www.themusiccircus.org

Hometown memories inspire 'Lakeville' singer

Amy Correia performs Newport's Sunset Music Festival

Amy Correia recorded her debut album, "Carnival Love," while under contract to Capitol Records. Her sophomore album, "Lakeville" — released in October by Nettwerk America — was a much different experience, however, for the singer and songwriter.

"With the first one, I had what seemed like limitless resources - major label, seven different producers, and money," explained Correia last week by telephone from New York. "When I started this record, I had no money, no label and no resources. I wrote all the songs, and we recorded the whole thing live, with musicians from L.A., in just eight days including the mixing. Only after the album was done did I make the deal with my new label to release it."

The tight recording schedule, and even tighter budget, has done little, however, to dampen the singer's enthusiasm for the new release. "I like all kinds of music, so this album is very different from my first one. It's more bluesy and much more live sounding. The songs I wrote for it are very rootsy and inspired by early jazz, blues and folk music. It is not a modern-sounding record at all. People often say to me, 'You're so much better live than on your recordings,' and I think this new album really captures some of what I can do in front of a live audience. The relaxation and confidence are there. These songs are dark, but there's joy in the singing of them."

Correia first discovered her joy of singing while growing up in Lakeville. Since graduating from Barnard College, Correia, 36, has lived in Los Angeles and New York. It was her childhood home, however, that gave her the name for her new CD and its title track.

"The song 'Lakeville' refers to a meditative place — my Zen place. It's not exactly about my hometown," says the artist who lists The Rolling Stones and Bob Dylan as her greatest musical influences. "But I do have many wonderful childhood associations of life in Lakeville. When I was growing up, it was a very big event for my friends and me to go to the South Shore Plaza in Braintree, and to Dairy Queen in Middleborough. That's a stop I still make, whenever I visit my parents."

Amy Correia will open for Ben Folds on Saturday, July 2, at the 8th Annual Sunset Music Festival in Newport, R.I. For tickets and information, call 401-846-1600 or visit www.newportfestivals.com For information about Amy Correia, visit www.amycorreia.com.

HEARING BETTER IN STYLE

Most hearing loss in older adults is caused by presbycusis, the age-related degeneration of the inner ear that results in lowered sensitivity to high frequencies and a loss in the ability to discriminate among speech sounds. Presbycusis generally affects both ears equally and most people with the condition can benefit from instruments in each ear. There are four basic styles of hearing instruments. Completely-in-the-canal (CIC) and in-the-canal (ITC), which account for 75% of hearing instruments now sold, are customized to fit entirely (or almost entirely) in the ear. In-the-ear (ITE) models are worn in the external ear, making them slightly more noticeable. (BTE) behind-the-ear models are housed in a crescent-shaped plastic case that hooks over the ear.

Success in wearing any kind of hearing aid beings with the proper fitting of the most appropriate aid by a Board Certified Hearing Instrument Specialist. A hearing aid that is appropriate to the impairment and well-fitted to the individual is more likely to be worn regularly. If you'd like a hearing test to determine the state of your hearing, please call us at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 781-337-1144. Located at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg, in Weymouth, we offer FREE hearing evaluations, FREE batteries for the life of any hearing instrument purchased, and all in-office repairs are FREE for all makes of hearing aids.

Maine Courses

Lobster rolls, fine dining and everything in between

Last in a series on places to eat and things to do at New England vacation hot spots.

By BARBARA RADCLIFFE ROGERS
SPECIAL TO THE HERALD

You go up to Maine, you probably want at least one meal to be lobster-in-the-rough. But dining on the Maine Coast offers much more these days. Fine dining is part of the mix from the southern beaches to Acadia National Park. Crystal-and-linens dining rooms or picnic tables on the wharf, your choice.

All prices for a full meal.

1. Chauncey Creek Lobster Pier, Kittery Point; 207-439-1030

The first town in Maine, just over the border, is also the first stop for lobster and impeccably fresh seafood, served in a lobster shack above the tidal creek. Mussels, steamers and lobster, cooked simply, and simply wonderful. Less than $20.

2. York Harbor Inn, Coastal Route 1A, York Harbor; 800-343-3869

Overlooking the beachy cove at the beginning of York's Cliff Walk, the inn serves lobster stuffed with shrimp and scallops, chicken breast filled with lobster, even lobster-filled ravioli, in an elegant setting. More than $40.

3. Pier French Fries, 12 Old Orchard St., Old Orchard Beach; 207-934-2328

Fries just don't get any tastier. Served in cones so you can munch them as you walk, or in boxes to go with your picnic, these spuds are a Maine summer institution. Less than $10.

4. The Clambake Restaurant, Pine Point (Route 9), Scarborough; 207-883-4871

Everyone likes this place for an authentic shore hall experience and great value for fried or baked seafood dinners. Even the big fisherman's platter is less than $20. Less than $20.

5. Mabel's Lobster Claw, Ocean Ave., Kennebunkport; 207-967-2562

Mabel is adamant that a real lobster roll filling should be made only with the tails and claws of fresh chicken lobster, never frozen. The first bite proves her point. Less than $20.

6. Portland Public Market, 25 Preble St., Portland; 207-228-2000

Any trip to the city should include a stop for breakfast or lunch at this daily market in a brand-new glass-walled building filled with local agricultural products, bakeries and food producers. Here you can see the source of inspiration for Portland's chefs (who might be shopping right beside you).

7. Bandol, 90 Exchange St., Portland; 207-347-7155

Expect the unexpected at Portland's newest stand-out, where the chef follows the French lead in using cuts of meat rarely seen on American tables, such as calves' brains. Delicious renditions of more familiar offerings include three versions of Muscovy duck served together. Eight wines accompany the nine-course tasting menu, or choose from a prix fixe five-course menu. A la carte is available at the bar. More than $40.

8. O'Naturals, 83 Exchange St., Portland; 207-321-2050

"Alternative fast foods" is an idea whose time has come. Picture a fast-food venue where all the foods are organic, healthy and served on real plates with metal silverware. Add Internet access and a play area for kids. Imagine all this with real chefs turning out delicious meals, and you have O'Naturals. Less than $20.

9. Pilot House Restaurant, Sebasco Harbor Resort, Route 17, Phippsburg; 800-225-3819

Spectacular sunsets over Casco Bay complement dishes such as veal rolled around grilled asparagus and lobster meat, finished with lemon hollandaise. Salmon is marinated in Grand Marnier, and the meat dishes are just as well-conceived. More than $40.

10. Hannibals' Cafe, On the Common, Route 235, Union; 207-785-3663

The use of locally produced ingredients makes this cafe worth the 9-mile detour from Camden. Try a sandwich of local smoked salmon and chevre from a nearby farm on wholegrain bread baked by Borealis bakery in Waldeboro. Under $10.

11. Muddy Rudder, Route 15, Brewer (across the river from Bangor); 207-989-5389

Order a Down East clambake, whole boiled lobster or the Rudder's own take on the traditional fisherman's platter æ a seafood broil of fresh haddock, shrimp, scallops and lobster. Tables inside or on the deck overlook the river. Less than $20.

12. Cafe Bluefish, 122 Cottage St., Bar Harbor; 207-288-3696

Lobster strudel is the signature dish of this intimate retreat in downtown Bar Harbor, but the pecan-crusted salmon with creole brown butter draws as many admiring fans. To top off a true Maine experience, finish with old-fashioned blueberry crisp. $20-$40.

13. Tidal Falls Lobster Pound, East Side Road, Hancock; 207-422-6457

Do a good turn for the environment at this lobster-in-the-rough restaurant operated by Frenchman's Bay Conservancy to protect this point overlooking beautiful tidal falls. Less than $20.

14. Blue Sage Bistro, Route 102 at Crooked Road, Town Hill; 207-288-3696

A 15-minute drive from Bar Harbor, this bistro serves dishes influenced by the chef's travels all over the world but relies on home-grown Maine ingredients for the real inspiration. Scallops a la Greque are flavored with garlic, lemon zest, olive oil and a splash of ouzo; halibut is crusted with curry and served with blueberry-mint chutney. $20-$40.

15. Jordan Pond House, Acadia National Park, on Jordan Pond; 207-276-3316

Perhaps the most genteel tradition in all of Maine is teatime on the sweeping lawns of Jordan Pond House. The event begins with a bevy of women crossing the lawn bearing baskets of piping-hot popovers, just as tea has begun here for more than a century. Less than $20.

16. The Blair Hill Inn, Lily Bay Road, Greenville; 207-695-0224

From the dining room of this grand 1891 home, the view extends across Moosehead Lake into Maine's northern wilderness. Timeless as the view may be, the kitchen is up-to-the-minute in stylish presentations. The five-course dinner features fresh organically grown herbs and vegetables from the inn's own greenhouse. More than $40.

Would take bite out of ACO costs

By Samantha Brown

When an override fails, a town is forced to come up with creative ways to maintain services with a lower bottom line than it would like. Ideas for partnering with other towns to share services have been floated at recent meetings and Town Manager Bill Griffin along with Police Chief James Hussey have a proposal on the table.

Although nothing has been set in stone and the board of selectmen will have to approve a final contract, Griffin and Hussey — whom the animal control officer reports to — have negotiated a cooperative agreement with the town of Norwell to share the services of Cohasset's animal control officer and Norwell's animal control vehicle. The board will take up the matter at its July 12 meeting.

Roy Herzfelder to step down from top environmental post

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Cohasset resident Ellen Roy Herzfelder jokes when she became state Secretary of Environmental Affairs, she had no idea how little spare time there would be for kayaking and bird watching.

But soon she could be spotted gliding along the water in Little Harbor near her Beach Street home. Roy Herzfelder has decided to resign from the cabinet post.

"It was a very complex decision for me. I love this job," she said, adding there were many interesting issues she delved into during her roughly 2-1/2 years in the office.

However, she said with two small children, Julia, 6, and Desmond, 4, she has decided to cut back on her duties to enable her to spend more time with them and her husband, Bruce Herzfelder. Although a firm date has not been set regarding when the resignation will take effect, it will be sometime this month.

But Roy Herzfelder is by no means quitting her day job altogether. She has accepted a position to serve as Senior Policy Advisor for Governor Mitt Romney. While the new position will surely keep her busy, she said there won't be as many public events.

As Secretary of Environmental Affairs, Roy Herzfelder oversees regulatory agencies such as the Department of Environmental Protection, Department of Fish and Game, Department of Agriculture, and Office of Coastal Zone Management. She is also responsible for the state parks agency, the Department of Conservation and Recreation, which is the sixth largest system in the United States based on acreage.

"I loved the breadth of the job," she said.

Roy Herzfelder began serving at her post in January 2003, and only three short months later, was faced with a severe environmental crisis. On April 27, the tank barge Bouchard

Deadline for Cook bids draws near

Project to be back in the news

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The heat has been taken off the Cook Estate project for the last month, but with a bid deadline for prospective developers set for July 15, senior housing off Sohier Street is about to take center stage again.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said the five companies which submitted bids the first time were sent copies to ensure a fair process.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said as of this week, 12 companies have received a copy of the Request for Proposals for the project — which dictates what the town would like to see built on the site — but zero bids have been received.

"Companies usually do not submit their proposals until the last day or so," said Griffin, adding with one week to go as of today (Friday), the limited turnout thus far is not unexpected.

Cohasset can count on at least one bid coming in as Northland Residential, the company the town had been working with over the past 16 months to build housing on the site, has plans to make another offer. Jack Dawley, vice president and director of acquisitions for Northland, said his company is currently in the process of putting together a package to be submitted next week.

Advertising for the new RFP began June 15, and prospective developers have had 30 days in which to make an offer. Griffin said all five companies which submitted bids the first time were sent copies to ensure a fair bid process. Those companies and their previous bids are as follows:

- Deer Hill Partners LLC of Braintree (in association with Coler & Colantonio, Inc., Ross Assoc. Architects, and Stockard, Engler & Brigham), $5.25 million
- Cohasset Residential LLC (c/o Black Rock Development of Hingham), $5.25 million
- Abbott Real Estate Development LLC of Boston, $5.35 million
- Northland Residential Corp. of Burlington, $5.425 million
- Baran-Keen (Baran Companies of Boston and Keen Development Corp. of Cambridge), $6 million

Planning board wants rebuilding to stop on 'Motif #1'

Says project needs site plan review

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The landscape is changing on Border Street as the dilapidated "Motif #1" — one of the buildings at the Mill River Marine Boatyard — is being rebuilt. While aesthetically the new building might look better, the planning board wants all work on the site to stop, saying proper permits have not been secured and town bylaws are being broken.

At the June 29 planning board meeting, member Peter Pratt said the board voted unanimously to send written communication to building inspector Robert Egan, recommending he direct all construction activity at Mill River Marine to cease and desist until a commercial site plan review is held for the site.

Pratt said the board believes the business is in violation of a section of the town's zoning bylaws, which requires site plan review approval for any effort to build, construct, reconstruct, or expand any buildings or structures. He added structures which will be changed to exceed a total gross floor area of 200 square feet in a business district — which applies to the Mill River building — are required to undergo site plan reviews.

"Our belief, based on our observations of the past week, is that the business is in the process of full reconstruction of at least one of its buildings," said Pratt.

The building, also known as the old "Eastwick" building for its role in the 1987 movie "The Witches of Eastwick" is a favorite with local artists and also provides a backdrop for kayakers who surf the rapids below. However, over the years the building, along with its two neighboring buildings, have fallen into disrepair and owner Peter Roy has been looking for a way to bring the buildings back to their former glory.

Roy purchased the buildings in 1999 from William Hanney, a businessman who had bought the site in 1994. Hanney had planned on constructing a residence on a majority of the property, but the dream never came to fruition.

Roy at one point had planned on constructing condominiums on the site while saving the historic Eastwick building, but environmental regulations for the waterfront property as well as a bylaw passed by Town Meeting which restricted the building of residential units in a business district made the project more difficult.

In the spring of 2004, attorney Charles Humphreys came before the planning board on behalf of his client, Mill River Boatyard LLC, led by local businessman Donald Staszko, who at that point planned to purchase the Mill River site from Roy. Staszko had planned to rebuild the three buildings on the site virtually the same way they stood.

However, that May, the planning board voted 3-0 against approval of the site plan, stating it thought the applicant had not provided enough information regarding the site's intended use, along with a failure to meet the parking requirement set forth in the town's bylaw and a failure to meet public safety requirements. Due to its location on the water, the site has very specific criteria in terms of use.

The Mill River team appealed the planning board's decision, and claimed that by denying the site plan, which outlined plans for a full-service boatyard, complete with hauling, launching, storage and repair facilities, the planning board overstepped its jurisdiction. Mill River alleges the discretion exercised by the planning board in its decision is an "abuse of power and in excess of their authority in that a planning board does not have discretion in a site plan approval process."

The planning board wants work to stop on the former "Eastwick" building at the harbor pending a site plan review.

However, the suit was dropped and Staszko opted out of the deal, bringing Roy back into the picture.

Pratt said based on the amount of work currently being done on the site, the board believes a site plan review should have been conducted before a building permit was granted. Therefore, the work at the site, "is being conducted without the legal authority of the town, which by definition means that building permits for the work have been issued improperly."

Pratt said in that case, or in the event the work has reached over permitted limits of minor repairs, the building inspector is required to stop work on the premises.

Building inspector Egan, who issued the permit to Roy last winter, said he was told repairs were going to be made to the building to essentially "keep it from falling into the river," which would not be considered a reconstruction. Egan said activity has been ongoing at the site since last fall, but when the weather became too cold, the building was covered and repairs began again this spring. As work progressed, he said it became evident more "new wood" could be seen on the building than "old wood," triggering the planning board's concern.

Egan plans to meet with members of the planning board as well as the Roy's developers to discuss the matter.

Residents sought for harbor health committee

Selectmen are looking for residents with an interest in studying the health of the harbor. Selectmen Gary Vanderweil has set the health of the harbor as a long-term goal for selectmen to delve into.

Vanderweil said things have changed dramatically with the harbor over the past few years as mollusks are disappearing, sea grass is dying, and galvanized hardware has a much shorter life when exposed to the harbor's water.

Vanderweil has suggested Paul Pattison, 104 Elm St.; Karen Quigley, 27 Clay Spring Road; Jack Buckley, 272 North Main St.; and Jim Drysdale, 4 Cedar Acres Lane, for the committee. But selectmen would like to hear from all interested parties before making the appointments.

Interested residents should either contact the selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105 or send a letter of interest to the board at Cohasset Town Hall, 42 Highland Ave. The appointments will be made at the board's next meeting, scheduled for July 12.

Walsh: teacher 'pink slips' won't affect the bottom line

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Eight Cohasset teachers were given non-renewal letters in the beginning of June, which has sparked rumors of mass layoffs to help balance the budget.

However, Supt. Denise Walsh said the letters have nothing to do with budgetary constraints, the positions will be filled next year, potentially by the same employees, but regulations required she send the notices prior to the 15th of the month.

Under state and federal laws, including No Child Left Behind and Department of Education regulations, Walsh said schools are required to have a "highly qualified teaching force," and non-renewal letters are part of that process. She said the letters are issued primarily for two reasons: problems with performance or certification.

Letters were given to one library teacher, one instructional media specialist, five special education teachers (equal to 4.4 positions), and one of the grade two positions privately funded in the fiscal 2005 budget that is not being added to the fiscal 2006 budget. The other privately funded position for fiscal 2005, a grade three teacher, was not issued a non-renewal letter due to that teacher's resignation.

Walsh said a teacher can be given a non-renewal letter for performance for many reasons. She said during the first three years of employment, a principal must decide each year whether a teacher is to continue on for another year. At the end of the third year, a recommendation is made to the superintendent regarding whether he or she feels the teacher should be granted "professional teacher status," formerly known as "tenure."

Notices are part of process

"At that time, because of the long-range commitment by the school department, consideration is given to the overall job performance and/or just the wish to exercise the school department's option to advertise the position and see if a stronger candidate applies," she said.

The second case a teacher would be given a non-renewal letter is problems with certification. Walsh said school systems are required to have professional staff members who are either certified or working under a Department of Education waiver for the grade level or department they are assigned to teach. Walsh added there is a process for waivers, and they must be reviewed by the Department of Education (DOE) each year in order to show progress toward certification. She said there is a two year maximum on each DOE waiver.

Before a superintendent may apply for a waiver for an employee, "I must first advertise, post, and interview qualified candidates, therefore I must first issue a non-renewal, even if I were to encourage the staff member to reapply," Walsh said.

Questioned recently surfaced about the positions, as the failure of the $400,000 operating budget override, which would have been used to subsidize the school budget, has led the school committee to make some budget cuts. The school department is responsible for making up $285,000 of the $400,000 gap.

A recent vote of the school committee decided four teaching positions — including the two privately funded positions from fiscal 2005, as well as two newly proposed positions to be added this year — cannot be included in the fiscal 2006 budget. Those four positions make up roughly $180,000, and anticipated circuit breaker (special education) funding is expected to make up the remaining $105,000 balance.

However, at the June 16 meeting of the school committee, Walsh announced the schools will need to make up an additional $168,000 in salaries for fiscal 2006. Salary commitments from fiscal 2005 have led to step increases and column changes for teachers, which will affect salaries for fiscal 2006.

Step increases happen at the completion of every year of teaching, and increases for the past three years have typically been between $1,500 and $3,000 per teacher.

Column changes occur in addition to step increases as teachers continue to pursue their education. Teachers start off at column one with a bachelor's degree and progress through the columns as they earn credits or receive higher degrees. The average increase for a column change is between $1,000 and $2,000.

Cohasset & Norwell take bite out of animal control costs

both recently experienced Prop. 2-1/2 override failures. Prop. 2-1/2 is the state law that caps the amount a community can increase its tax levy. Cohasset residents voted down a $400,000 operating budget override and Norwell residents voted down a $2.2 million operating budget override.

Griffin said as a result, it is his understanding Norwell had plans to greatly reduce the number of hours for its animal control officer to help its bottom line, that may not have been adequate coverage for the town.

In Cohasset, while the animal control officer position remained virtually the same for fiscal 2006, although it was cut by five hours to make it a 20-hour per week position, transportation was an issue. The old animal control van is in need of replacement and it was not within the town's budget to either purchase or lease a new van. Griffin said in light of what each town had to offer, the partnership made sense.

"This is one of those cooperative relationships that people have been saying they think should happen more in towns," said Griffin, adding with selectmen's approval, the towns will enter into a one-year trial agreement.

"This is one of those cooperative relationships that people have been saying they think should happen more in towns."

— Town Manager Bill Griffin

Coincidentally, both towns have been essentially sharing their animal control officer for years, as Hingham resident Paul Murphy holds the part-time position in both towns.

Griffin explained Cohasset will compensate the animal control officer for 20 hours per week for his normal duties, which is included in the fiscal 2006 budget. While on duty, the officer will respond to calls in both Cohasset and Norwell. Any calls to Norwell outside of the 20 hours will be compensated by the town of Norwell, which will come out of the reduced salary line item that town had planned on.

In exchange for Cohasset's paying the regular salary for the officer, Norwell will provide the animal control vehicle and will also be responsible for the maintenance and upkeep of the vehicle. Norwell will also be responsible for providing insurance coverage on the vehicle.

Griffin said during the trial phase, both towns will monitor the situation to ensure residents are getting the services they need. However, he said this looks like an agreement that will "help both sides."

Griffin said the partnership shows the town is willing to come up with ways to help cut costs, and he hopes it can serve as a way to generate ideas for more partnerships. If nothing else, he said it serves as a reminder that towns on the South Shore don't just have to operate within their own four walls, but can work together to help make their respective communities a success.

In addition to those five, there are seven other companies which requested copies, but Griffin said he suspects at least three of the companies are not developers themselves, but may offer services to developers, such as design plans for on-site septic systems or other such specialties.

The new RFP has a different set of guidelines in place, which includes a new minimum bid price of $4.9 million The number of units has been reduced from a maximum of 95 to a maximum of 65 and the town-owned land has been removed from the transaction. The town owns an 8.7 acre parcel behind Stop & Shop that abuts the Cook property, which during the first round was going to be marketed with the Cook land and sold together to allow the town to make a profit.

While the town-owned land was included in the first RFP, based on the requirement that it would be deeded back to the town as open space, the selectmen voted to leave it out of the new transaction. An easement to access the property will therefore be required in the new RFP.

Now, instead of looking to make a profit, the town is more interested in making up the money it has spent. The price tag will not change for the Cook property — which includes 18.92 acres off Sohier Street across from Fairoaks Lane, and roughly 3 acres on the other side of Sohier Street between the Fairoaks neighborhood and the Mobil station on Route 3A. The town will pay $4.5 million for both parcels.

With a minimum bid price of $4.9 million, the town will be assured it can at least makes $400,000, which will be enough to cover the $250,000 spent in legal fees, engineering costs, and appraisals for the project so far, and provide a small cushion.

During the first bidder selection process, the board of selectmen had the benefit of an RFP advisory committee. The committee was made up of citizens who went over each bid proposal, made site visits to existing projects the companies had built, and narrowed down the field of candidates. The committee came up with a set of comparison sheets, rating how well each development met the criteria the town would like to see, and then made a final recommendation. Out of 100 points, Northland had a total of 83 with Blackrock/Northwest coming in second with 77.

This time around, selectmen may not have the benefit of a selection committee working on its behalf. Time is of the essence and Griffin said he will ask the board of selectmen what route it would like to take in terms of bidder selection, at its next meeting July 12.

In the event the town does not receive any bids it deems satisfactory, Griffin said, "It'll have a decision to make." There is a Sept. 15 deadline with the heirs of the Cook Estate, and after that time any extensions will cost the town $20,000 per month. If in the end the town purchases the property, the monthly fees will go toward the purchase price of the land. If the deal falls through, the town will not make up any of the money spent on extensions.

Flashback —After two hours of discussion, voters at the November 2003 Annual Town Meeting approved the purchase of the Cook land for $4.5 million, to be marketed to developers with the town's adjacent land, with the intention of selling the parcels together for a profit. However, problems arose with wastewater disposal and plans changed.

Northland was awarded the original bid on the project in May 2004, and soil tests conducted soon after determined wastewater from 95 units of housing — the most units the original RFP asked for — could not be handled on site and other options would need to be looked into.

Northland spent a good deal of money and put in countless man hours helping the town come up with wastewater solutions. Soil testing was done on site, holes were dug at both the South Shore Music Circus and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library to determine whether off-site leaching fields would be a possibility at either location, and the possibility of municipal sewer was also pursued. However, in the end the only alternative found was to downsize the project, as fewer units would generate a smaller amount of wastewater, which could be accommodated on site. However, with the change in scope of the project, the board of selectmen said it would be necessary to begin a new bid process pursuant to Massachusetts procurement laws.

Bradley: OxyContin controls are critical

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If Garrett Bradley has his way – then the narcotic OxyContin will be a lot harder to obtain.

The state representative for the Third Plymouth District that includes Cohasset says OxyContin, a highly additive drug, is not just being prescribed for those suffering from terminal cancer as many may believe.

"It's amazing how quickly the drug is changing lives."

— State Rep. Garrett Bradley

Some doctors are writing prescriptions for injuries and ailments — like having impacted wisdom teeth removed — that could be treated with another drug, Bradley says.

He also says illicit use of OxyContin is on the rise. He fears some teenagers think the drug is "OK" because it's available legally with a doctor's prescription.

Bradley, who is serving on the state Legislature's OxyContin Commission, says abuse of the drug is soaring.

Last week the commission heard testimony from Plymouth County District Attorney Tim Cruz and Norfolk County DA William Keating at a public hearing at Bridgewater State College. During the four-hour hearing, the commission also heard from members of the medical community. Area residents, whose children are addicted to OxyContin – which is an opiate like heroin — also shared their stories.

"There have to be guidelines established for doctors to follow before OxyContin can be prescribed," Bradley explained, adding other drugs and physical therapy need to be tried first. In other words, OxyContin should be used medically as a last resort because it is so addictive.

Bradley says health insurance providers also need to provide a minimum of 60 days coverage in a treatment facility for a plan subscriber who is suffering from OxyContin addiction.

The commission, which will conduct another hearing on Beacon Hill in July, will compile its findings for the governor. The problem can be attacked through legislation or an executive order regulating the drug, Bradley said.

He also said youth need to be educated about OxyContin abuse, as well as those who are being prescribed the drug and may not know the risks.

"I want people being prescribed the drug to know how addictive it is and that there are other options," Bradley said.

"It's amazing how quickly the drug is changing lives," he said, who notes efforts to provide more controls could be an uphill battle.

"We're fighting powerful forces," Bradley said. "Many think OxyContin is the best thing since sliced bread.

"It's important that we draw a line in the sand and tell the drug companies that it's not being prescribed as it should be," he said.

Bradley said one OxyContin pill can cost upwards of $40 "on the street." Therefore, he said teen abuse often occurs in the more affluent communities.

Bradley said abuse of OxyContin has not peaked and expects it will reach the level of abuse that crack cocaine did in the mid-1980s.

"This is the most addictive new drug to emerge in some time," Bradley said. He also warned that when consumed with alcohol, OxyContin can be deadly. Often the person goes to sleep and their respiration slowly decreases until breathing stops completely.

Bradley is one of three members of the House serving on the OxyContin Commission that also includes three state senators, the commissioner of mental health, the commissioner of the public health drug control program and three people appointed by the governor with expertise in drug regulation, prescription, treatment and abuse.

About OxyContin

Street name: killers, OC, oxy, OxyCotton, Oxy80 (referring to the 80 mg tablet)

What is it: OxyContin (oxycodone HCI controlled-release) is the brand name for an opioid analgesic – a narcotic. OxyContin is used to treat pain that is associated with arthritis, lower back conditions, injuries, and cancer. It is approved for the treatment of moderate to severe pain that requires treatment for more than a few days and available by prescription only.

What does it look like? Most commonly seen in tablet form. These round pills come in 10mg, 20mg, 40mg, 80mg and 160mg dosages. OxyContin also comes in capsule or liquid form.

How is it used ? As pain medication, OxyContin tablets are taken every 12 hours. Most pain medications must be taken every three to six hours. Oxycontin abusers remove the sustained-release coating to get a rush of euphoria similar to heroin. They chew the tabs, crush them for snorting, or boil the powder for injection.

Short term effects: Taking broken, chewed, or crushed, tablets could lead to the rapid release and absorption of a potentially toxic dose of oxycodone. Reports indicate that hundreds of people have died after overdosing in this fashion, usually as a result of acute pulmonary edema.

Long term effects: Chronic use of OxyContin use will result in increased tolerance to the drug in which higher doses of the medication must be taken to receive the initial effect. Over time, OxyContin will be come physically addictive, causing a person to experience withdrawal symptoms when the drug is not present.

Statistics :The supply of OxyContin is soaring. Sales of OxyContin, first marketed in 1996, hit $1.2 billion in 2003. The FDA reports that OxyContin may have played a role in 464 deaths across the Country in 2000 to 2001.

Senior center eyes shuttle fees

Every town department will be affected by the failure of the $400,000 operating budget override, and Cohasset Elder Affairs Chairman Anna Abbruzzese said the CEA is no exception.

Beginning in September, the CEA could begin charging for the use of the shuttle bus to help offset expenses. The shuttle bus takes seniors around town or to other towns for appointments.

The CEA is considering issuing a "punch card" at a cost of $20, which will entitle the holder to ride the shuttle in town for $1 or one punch of the punch card.

There would be no charge for seniors being transported to the senior center for lunch.

The CEA is considering issuing a "punch card" at a cost of $20, which will entitle the holder to ride the shuttle in town for $1 or one punch of the punch card. Out-of-town appointments within a 15-mile radius will be $5, or five punches.

In a memo sent to Town Manager Bill Griffin, Abbruzzese stated CEA director Kathy Bryanton has been challenged to keep the center and all its services running as smoothly as possible. Bryanton hopes through private funding and grants, the CEA will be able to keep its integrity going through this temporary "crunch."

However, to maintain consistency with the CEA's transportation program, "We have during the past year paid a stipend to several drivers. This gives our elders the security of having the same driver taking them to shopping malls and on other out-of-town trips. It assures us that our seniors are afforded that extra attention while away from home," Abbruzzese wrote. Implementing the fees would keep the program running as it has been.

Abbruzzese said she would like the input of the board of selectmen before anything is finalized.

Keith Lockhart returns to Music Circus

Keith Lockhart had an unforgettable experience on the South Shore last summer, as did all who attended the sold-out concert of the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra at the Music Circus. Lockhart brought down the house, and at the end of the evening promised his audience that he would return to Cohasset.

Keeping his word, Maestro Lockhart is appearing at the Music Circus for another summer concert, Saturday evening, July 30th, 7 p.m. to benefit education and exhibition programs at the South Shore Art Center.

This year, Broadway star Liz Callaway joins the Pops for a "Baby Boomer Bash." Callaway will sing such classics as "Feelin Groovy," "MacArthur Park" on a program with "Don't Touch That Dial" —a medley of musical memories from the '60s. The program ends with a Baby-Boomer Sing-Along, including hits from that generation's pop favorites such as "Your Momma Don't Dance," "Doo Wah Diddy", "(I Can't Get No)Satisfaction" and "YMCA."

Tickets are on sale now, and can be purchased at the South Shore Music Circus Box Office, open daily from Noon until 6 p.m., or through Ticketmaster, 617-931-2787, or www.ticketmaster.com.

Tour retraces Thoreau's footsteps

In July 1851, Concord naturalist, Henry David Thoreau visited Hull and Cohasset on his way southeast to Cape Cod. He noted observations in his journal of both the natural and human worlds around him, leaving historians with a literary snapshot of life in those communities in the mid-19th Century.

Join Mass Audubon's John Galluzzo on Sunday, July 17, from 9a.m. to noon, as he retraces the steps of Thoreau and recounts his observations in the author 's own words, from Stony Beach to Straits Pond to Little Harbor, as documented in the naturalist's posthumously published Cape Cod.

"In the Footsteps of Henry David Thoreau" is a Mass Audubon Van With a View Tour, costing $13, or $10 for a member of Mass Audubon. Pre-registration is required. The van will leave from Mass Audubon's South Shore Regional Office in Marshfield at 9 a.m., with a secondary pick-up spot at Fort Revere Park in Hull. Attendees are asked to dress accordingly for the weather. For more information, contact 781-837-9400.

Jeff Corwin is on a quest to complete the EcoZone

Music Circus shows this weekend

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

After spending more than a year traveling to 17 different countries shooting episodes of his new Animal Planet series, "Corwin's Quest," Jeff Corwin finally had some time off at home in Marshfield a few weeks ago. For the Emmy Award-winner now in his 10th year on television, that didn't mean putting his feet up.

"I'm so glad to be home with my wife and daughter," said Corwin, 37, by telephone. "And my deck is covered with flowers just waiting to be planted."

The wildlife biologist did more than yard work during his time off. He also prepared for the two live shows he will do at the South Shore Music Circus on July 9 to benefit the EcoZone at the private, non-profit South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell.

"I want the details to be a surprise, but people who come can count on seeing things as long as long can be and as heavy as heavy can be. The shows will be all about humor, energy and plenty of audience participation," says the Norwell native. "I only do live shows when I absolutely need to. But they are a great way to raise money for the EcoZone, a very special place which I am very rooted in."

EcoZone's roots date to 1999 when Corwin collaborated with the South Shore Natural Science Center to build an exhibit area designed to teach children and adults about the natural wonders found in southeastern Massachusetts. Features of the EcoZone, which opened in January 2002, include live pond exhibits complete with water, vegetation, frogs, fish, and turtles.

"I was there earlier this year and it was great to see people interacting with the exhibits," says Corwin, who earned a bachelor of science degree in biology and anthropology from Bridgewater State College and a master of science degree in wildlife and fisheries conservation from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. "We want people to immerse themselves and learn about things like the tide which is the feature of an exhibit on how tides affect the North and South rivers. Since I was a child, I've been a visitor and a volunteer at the Natural Science Center. The EcoZone helps people in our area connect with the eco-system that sustains them."

Jeff Corwin has prepared two live shows he will do at the South Shore Music Circus on July 9 to benefit the EcoZone at the private, non-profit South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell.

Saturday's Music Circus shows —as well an adults-only event that evening at the South Shore Natural Science Center — are designed to sustain and grow the EcoZone.

"Initially, we were raising money for an idea. Now, it is 80 percent complete. People in Norwell, Scituate, Cohasset and the surrounding areas should be very proud of what has already been accomplished with their support. There are just a few exhibits left to be created."

Corwin — who served as an expedition naturalist for the acclaimed National Geographic documentary series "The Jason Project," under the direction of Robert Ballard, before hosting his own series first for the Disney Channel and, since 1998, for the Discovery Channel and Animal Planet — reaches over 13 million viewers in the United States and many more in over 70 countries worldwide with his television programs. His latest, "Corwin's Quest," which premiered earlier this month as part of Animal Planet's new "Wild Wednesday," looks at trends and themes in nature.

"We'll travel the world and highlight amazing natural events. Each episode is designed to feel seamless as we go from one country to another to tell our stories. It's a tremendous challenge to get all the good, high-end natural history footage that we need," explained Corwin who worked with a 30-person research team based in Bristol, England, on the 13 episodes of the new series' first season.

For just one episode on "Teamwork," the show traveled to Costa Rica to track army ants; Central Africa to report on social spiders; Uganda to film a troupe of monkey-hunting chimpanzees; and Louisiana to cover the bird of prey, the Harris's hawk.

The telegenic Corwin — chosen in 2002 as one of "People" magazine's "50 Most Beautiful People" — may spend much of his time circling the globe, but he remains devoted to the place he calls home.

"My work today is very much based on what I learned growing up on the South Shore. We have unique wildlife, beautiful forests and pretty rivers, too. It is why I still live here today. The feedback I get from my television viewers is that they want to see orangutans and such, but I also want to make sure that they don't forget the natural beauty in their own backyards."

Jeff Corwin will present shows at 10:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. on Saturday, July 9, at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier Street, Cohasset. For general tickets and information, call 617-931-2787 or visit www.themusiccircus.org. There are also a limited number of premium seats for both shows. Please call the Natural Science Center at 781-659-2559 for more details.

Also on July 9, Corwin and singer Susan Tedeschi will co-host an adults-only party, "Wild Blue Night," from 6-9 p.m. at the South Shore Natural Science Center, Jacob's Lane, Norwell. The gathering will feature entertainment by the James Montgomery Band. Tickets are $100 and are available by calling 781-659-2559.

Proceeds from the Music Circus shows and "Wild Blue Night" will benefit the EcoZone.

OPINION

Our 'green' lady

It's been really nice having Ellen Roy Herzfelder as state Secretary of Environmental Affairs.

When we first interviewed Roy Herzfelder back in February 2003 after she was appointed to the cabinet post she promised to maintain her connection to the South Shore and her hometown, Cohasset.

She kept that promise and over the past 2-1/2 years we've enjoyed covering local events – such as the wild turkey release at Wompatuck State Park; acquisition of more open space for the Weir River Watershed; and the ribbon cutting at the Center for Student Coastal Research, to name a few – all of which our environmental secretary attended.

We felt comfortable knowing someone from our very own community was meeting with the governor and other state officials on a regular basis about the importance of our region, which is a precious and fragile environmental gem.

Her duties as Secretary included overseeing 3,000 people in five agencies – not an easy task for mother of two young children.

A Harvard graduate with masters degrees from the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard and MIT's Sloan School of Management, Roy Herzfelder was well prepared for the challenges of the cabinet post.

She was also a founder, owner and senior manager of International Energy Company that owned and operated electric power plants. She is understandably proud of the environmentally friendly record of her family's business.

While advocating for the environment, she understood business has to be part of the solution in protecting air quality, waterways, coastlines and more.

We're sure the next Secretary of Environmental Affairs will be equally qualified and competent. But it was just nice to know that Roy Herzfelder lived right here on Beach Street. It was comforting to know we had not only a friend but a neighbor at the highest levels of state government.

Being neighborly

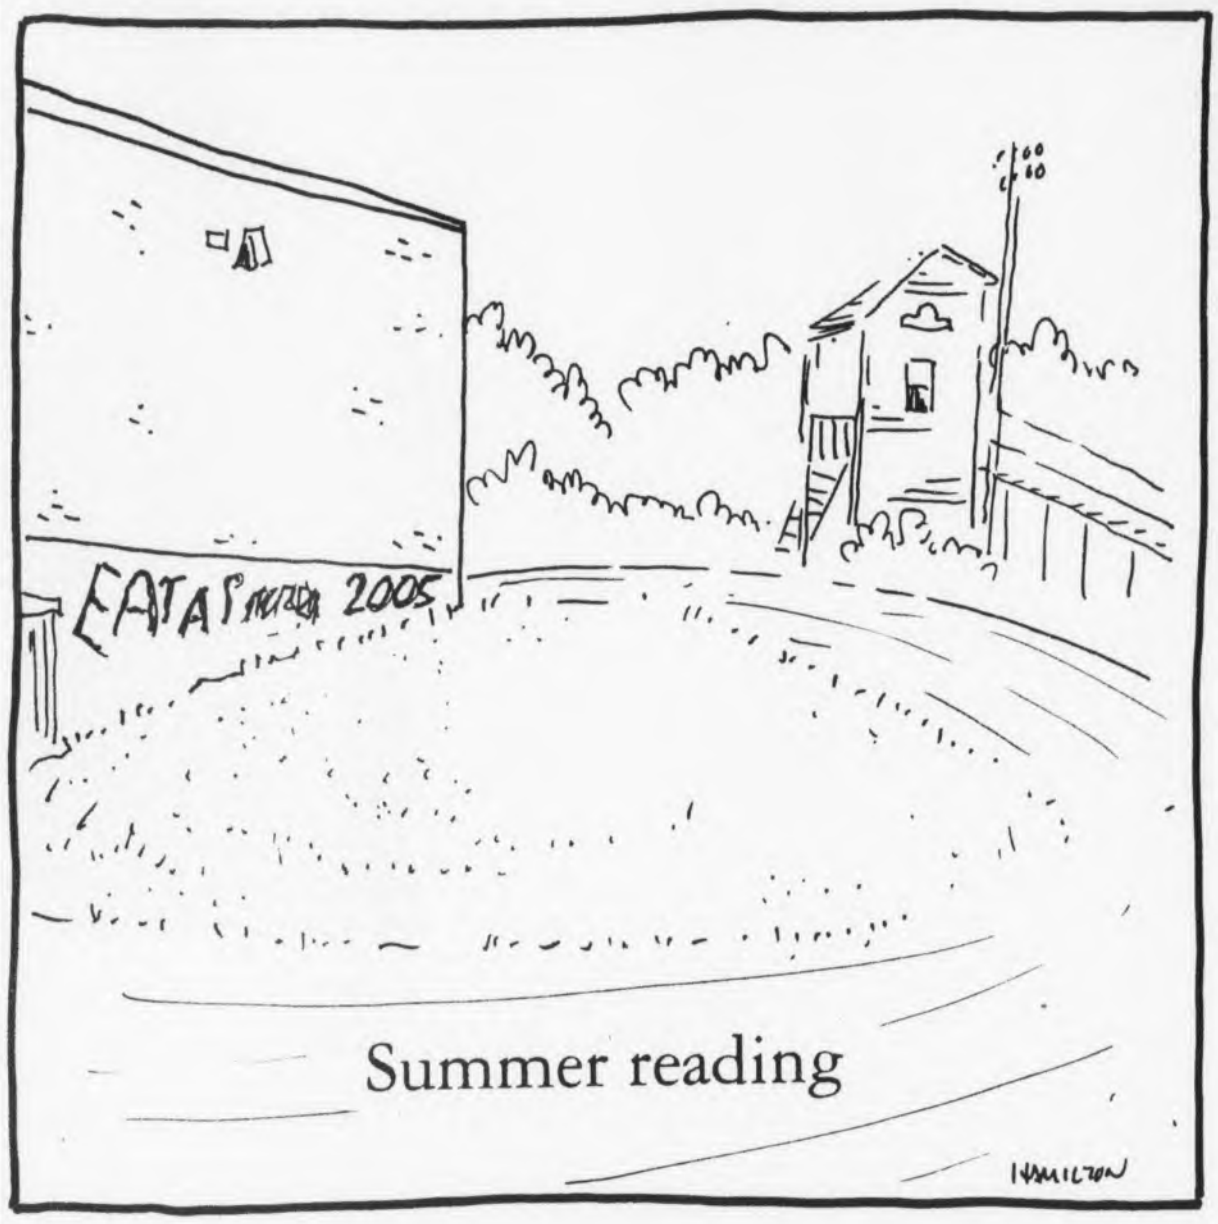
We applaud Chief James Hussey and Town Manager Bill Griffin for helping to come up with a plan to save the town some money. Our animal control officer Paul Murphy has worked part-time for both Cohasset and Norwell. But Norwell which didn't pass a whopping $2.2 million override this spring was going to virtually eliminate its animal control budget for obvious reasons.

Through a creative partnership, Norwell – which owns the van – will provide the van and cover the vehicle's maintenance costs while sharing Cohasset's animal control hours.

For more of the details on the partnership, please read Samantha Brown's story this week.

Years ago, we covered Norwell as a reporter – and we can vouch for the fact that it's a very well run town. Like Cohasset, however, its residents love their dogs and cats. Wild animals often "invade" people's comfort zones as they do here – so we cannot imagine that town or this one operating without an animal control officer.

Let's hope selectmen agree to give this "pilot plan" a try.



Who knows, it could lead to other cost-saving, inter-town efforts!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Slow down on Parker Avenue

TO THE EDITOR:

Have you ever driven down Parker Avenue and noticed signs that say "Speed Limit 15"? Lots of people seem to either not see them, or else they think they mean everyone but them.

Parker Avenue is a small, narrow residential street, about a third of a mile long that has changed dramatically in the last few years. At the end of the street are a 100-plus slip marina, a rowing center, a summer day camp, and the Town boat ramp. When you move onto the street, you naturally assume that there will be a lot of traffic during the summer. That comes with the turf. What should not come with the turf is the amount of speeding that has been going on. When the speed limit was being set, there were cars clocked at over 45 miles per hour!

Did you know that by the time you have gone less than half way down the street, you have gone past nine children under the age of seven? The houses on the street are close to the road. A young child can unthinkingly run in front of a car with the potential for a real tragedy.

The police have been most helpful, in some cases contacting the owner of the cars that are going well over the 15 mile speed limit. We appreciate their help, but how about a little common sense and a little common courtesy? Anyone familiar with recent incidents at the schools in town should know that the police have bigger fish to fry. Give 'em a break, and give Parker Avenue residents a break too! Pretend that one of those nine children is yours, or maybe your younger brother or sister. SLOW DOWN! The speeding is not limited just to young kids. Adults (or at least they should be chronologically speaking) are often the worst offenders. Set a better example. You're on your way to a relaxing day on the water. Start it with a relaxing drive down Parker Avenue and end it with a slow drive back up.

Thanks for your consideration.

Russell Bonetti

Relay For Life support appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

This year was the 20th anniversary of the Relay for Life, and the ninth year we have held the event in Cohasset. The Relay For Life was founded by one person wanting to make a difference and give people hope by raising money for the American Cancer Society. It is this hope that all volunteers feel when they become involved in organizing and raising money for this event. Once again our local Relay, comprised of volunteers from the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, Scituate and Hull, has helped reinforce this vision! Although the total contributions are not yet finalized, the amount raised will be very close to $150,000!

The Relay has grown from one event to over 4,300 in the US with over 3 million people participating. The Relay in Cohasset is part of this enormous effort and we are making a difference.

What I found most uplifting as chairperson of this event was the outpouring of community involvement. For this generous spirit I am most grateful, and on behalf of the Relay committee, would like to thank all those who have made this year's Relay such a great success. I wish to extend my gratitude and admiration to the 28 team captains and their members of over 400 people who raised the bulk of the money. In addition, we had 15 businesses contribute money and/or gifts, and 6 restaurants participate in the Taste of the Relay. This was all possible due to the many volunteers who came together and worked tirelessly. They faithfully showed up and did whatever had to be done to make it successful. We had children as young as 8, as well as teens who were eager to help wherever they were needed. It was great to see so many involved and enjoying themselves.

I am also grateful for the community facilities that were readily made available to us. The Second Congregational Church and the Cohasset High School administration generously allowed us to use their facilities to conduct our many planning and team meetings. Many thanks to Bob Levy, the cafeteria manager, for volunteering his time to make the Taste of the Relay successful and Brian Adams, the facilities manager, for giving his time to make sure all of the logistics needed for the event were coordinated with the school needs. I would also like to thank Chief of Police Hussey for his efforts to ensure that the needs of the event and the needs of the town were coordinated to make this a safe event for all. Thanks also to the abutters of the school field for their understanding, and for working with us to make this Relay an enjoyable, family event.

Finally, I would like to thank the men and women on the Relay committee who worked so hard to bring this effort to fruition. Their dedication and spirit has made chairing the Relay a truly gratifying and enjoyable process. Its success would not have been possible without their tremendous efforts.

Again, I would like to offer my heartfelt appreciation to all those who worked so hard and to those who generously contributed to the success of the Relay For Life. It is clearly proof that each and every person can make a difference when the community embraces the vision of hope.

Don't privatize our public schools

COMMENTARY

MAUREEN JERZ

I have been reading with some interest the recently published articles and letters related to the failed override and its effect on the school budget and recently attended the June 23rd School Committee meeting. As a former PSO member and president, a former School Council member and chair, a former School Committee member and chair, a former Advisory Committee member and chair, and a recent member of the School Budget Investigation Committee, I would like to comment on several issues that have been raised, both at School Committee meetings and in articles and letters in this newspaper.

There has been much talk about cutting teachers and saving teachers. The fact of the matter is that of the four teaching positions in question, two were not in last year's or this year's school budget (they were cut last year under the previous administration), and the other two positions were proposed positions for next year.

The two positions that were eliminated last year were also reinstated last year through private funding (largely donations from parents) that was accepted by the School Committee for that purpose. So the issue is really about adding (not cutting or saving existing positions) teaching positions for next year in the face of a failed override. Several members of the School Committee have suggested that they be funded by cutting discretionary spending, accepting private funding, and/or by instituting user fees for some services. I believe that we all, and parents in particular, should be very concerned about this discussion, and should be asking very pointed questions of those members of the School Committee who are proposing these funding mechanisms.

The school budget should be constructed publicly and with as much input as possible, a fact noted by a letter writer to last week's Mariner. And when adjustments have to be made because an override fails, input is of equal importance. School Committee Chairperson Jamie Williams stated at the close of the budget discussion on June 23rd that it was her intention to foster that kind of debate by raising the issues of discretionary spending and the addition of certain user fees. She stated that after members of the public challenged her attempts to stop discussion of anything but discretionary spending cuts and user fees at the June 16th meeting. In a June 15th email to the Superintendent and copied to other School Committee members, Ms. Williams was very clear that she would only allow very proscribed discussion of the budget situation. The email states that "The area of academic staff is off the table" and that "All other areas of discretionary spending are on the table." Putting aside the fact that directing the course of discussion prior to the meeting via email may well constitute an open meeting law violation, Ms. Williams' bias and intent is clear.

I am very concerned that these attempts to "frame" the budget discussion only in terms of "cutting discretionary items" and "instituting user fees" represent an attempt at the much broader agenda of privatization of our public schools. Keep in mind that the word "discretionary" is defined as "optional", and that user fees are in this situation a hidden tax on parents. My concerns have been raised even further by Mr. Slanetz' commentary in last week's Mariner. While I disagree strongly with many of the points made by Mr. Slanetz, including the suggestion that those who disagreed with his position on adding teaching positions (not cutting or saving positions as some have suggested) wanted to somehow "punish" parents for not voting for the override or build a case for another override, I want to focus on the comment that most appalled me, that "private money to supplement taxpayer money is a path to quality."

For many years, private donations to organizations like the PSO and the Cohasset Education Foundation, the arts and sports booster groups, and the occasional private individual donation have helped to supplement the curriculum by providing "enrichment" supplies and activities for the schools. These are "extras" and I support the use of these funds for these purposes. However, when you start to use private money and user fees to fund things that should be part of a basic publicly funded education, like teacher salaries, textbooks, classroom supplies and administrative costs, you begin to go down the slippery slope of real privatization of our public education system. Mr. Slanetz notes that we should not "bet the farm solely on annual overrides" as they relate to funding our educational services. I would argue that to bet the farm on the kind of private funding he is suggesting has the potential to be more disastrous.

Private funding

Adding teachers through private funding or by taxing the user (parents) raises particular concerns related to the collective responsibility of the community in providing a public education to its children. In fact, the School Committee in the Town of Wellesley (notably a high per pupil expenditure town) recently wisely turned down the offer to privately fund teachers because the concept is so contrary to the ideal that public education is a need whose cost should be borne by all of the citizens of a community for the common good. Last year several teaching positions in Cohasset were privately funded by well-intentioned individuals. One of those was a third grade position as I recall, and I will use that as an example.

Mr. Slanetz notes that last year the children "had a great school year based on the generosity of donors". That's great, but what will happen to those children this year as they move to fourth grade? Do they need an extra teacher this year as fourth graders? More importantly, what will happen to those children moving into third grade this year? Perhaps those same citizens will raise the money again for third grade? Do we actually need an extra third-grade teacher this year? If private interest raises money for a third-grade teacher we don't need, will they withdraw the funds if the School Committee wants to use them because they need a foreign language teacher in seventh grade? Perhaps self-interest will cause people to raise money only for grade four, in which case the fourth grade may

'Red tide' and the shellfish ban

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

While the red tide crisis has abated somewhat, still, most of Massachusetts Bay including Cohasset and surrounding towns are covered by a shellfish ban. According to the division of Marine fisheries, the openings represent only a small percentage of towns covered by the ban. Red tide is caused by growth of excessive amounts of algae. Algae are microscopic, single-celled plants that live in the sea. Most species of algae or phytoplankton are not harmful and serve as the energy producers at the base of the food chain, without which higher life on this planet would not exist.

Occasionally, the algae grow very fast or "bloom" and accumulate into dense, visible patches near the surface of the water. "Red Tide" is a common name for one form of such a phenomenon where certain phytoplankton species contain reddish pigments and "bloom" such that the water appears to be colored red. The term "red tide" is thus a misnomer because blooms are not associated with tides; they are usually not harmful; and those species that are harmful may never reach the densities required to discolor the water.

Unfortunately, a small number of species produce potent neurotoxinss that can be transferred through the food chain where they affect and even kill the higher forms of life such as zooplankton, shellfish, fish, birds, marine mammals, and even humans that feed either directly or indirectly on them.

Only a few dozen of the many thousands of species of microscopic and macroscopic algae are repeatedly associated with toxic or harmful blooms. Some species, such as the dinoflagellate Alexandrium tamarense produce potent s which are liberated when the algae are eaten. This is the species of algae which is responsible for the current red tide warning Today, 40 towns including Cohasset, Hull , and almost all shorefront towns on Massachusetts bay from Salisbury to Provincetown are covered by a shellfish ban which prohibits taking shellfish or carnivorous snails from the waters of these towns. Crustaceans such as lobsters and crabs are not included in the ban.

Toxins produced by the above algae are life threatening if ingested from shellfish. Symptoms are neurological and their onset is rapid. They include tingling, numbness, and burning of the mouth region, giddiness, drowsiness, fever, rash, and staggering. Duration of effects is a few days in non-lethal cases. The most severe cases result in respiratory arrest within 24 hours of consumption of the toxic shellfish. If the patient is not breathing or if a pulse is not detected, artificial respiration and CPR may be needed as first aid. There is no antidote; supportive therapy is the rule and survivors recover fully. This so-called paralytic shellfish poisoning is prevented by large-scale proactive monitoring programs (assessing levels in mussels, oysters, scallops, clams) and rapid closures to harvest of suspect or demonstrated toxic areas.

Symptoms begin anywhere from 15 minutes to 10 hours after eating the contaminated shellfish, although usually within two hours. Symptoms are generally mild, and begin with numbness or tingling of the face, arms, and legs. This is followed by headache, dizziness, nausea and lack of muscular coordination. Patients sometimes describe a floating sensation. In cases of severe poisoning, muscle paralysis and respiratory failure occur, and in these cases death may occur in two to 25 hours.

Every year, approximately 30 cases of poisoning by marine shellfish are reported in the United States. Because healthcare providers are not required to report these illnesses and because many milder cases are not diagnosed or reported, the actual number of poisonings may be much greater. Toxic seafood poisonings are more common in the summer than winter because dinoflagelates grow well in warmer seasons. It is estimated from cases with available data that one person dies every four years from toxic seafood poisonings.

Diagnosis and Prevention If suspect leftover fish or shellfish are available, they can easily be tested for the presence of the . Identification of the specific toxin is not usually necessary for treating patients because there is no specific treatment.

Check with local health officials before collecting shellfish and look for Health Department advisories about algae blooms, dinoflagellate growth or "red tide" conditions that may be posted at fishing supply stores.

Do not eat finfish or shellfish sold as bait. Bait products do not need to meet the same food safety regulations as seafood for human consumption.

Steve Bobo is a longtime member of the Cohasset Board of Health.

The justice from Scituate

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

There's an opening on the U. S. Supreme Court in Washington but I don't think anybody from Massachusetts need apply unless, of course, George wants to get Mitt out of the way to clear the road for Jeb or Tom or Dick or Harry in 2008.

But, what the heck, the Bay State has had enough already, with nine, second only to New York (14) since George Washington in 1789 nominated that first associate justice, a man from Massachusetts named Cushing, who lived in Scituate, no less.

He may have had the best of all educations but lawyering wasn't as profitable in greater Boston in the mid-18th century as it is today...

And he was chief justice for a week, too.

William Cushing, the son and grandson of colonial judges, was a graduate of Harvard with a master's degree from Yale, which gave him, in the words of Jack Kennedy, "the best of all worlds — a Harvard education and a Yale degree."

He may have had the best of all educations but lawyering wasn't as profitable in greater Boston in the mid-18th century as it is today so he had to move afield to Pownalborough in Lincoln County which one day became the state of Maine.

He was back to succeed his father as an associate justice of the state superior court, represented Scituate at the convention that drafted the Massachusetts constitution and succeeded John Adams as chief justice of the state courts in 1777.

As chief justice, he presided over the case, Commonwealth vs. Jennison, that in effect abolished slavery in Massachusetts.

One of the first acts by Washington as president was to name a chief justice of the United States. He picked John Jay of New York, although John Rutledge of South Carolina thought that he should have gotten the job. Keep an eye on him!

Then Washington appointed the abolitionist Cushing an associate justice in spite of the fact that the Virginia gentleman president owned a number of slaves on his Mount Vernon plantation and had no intention of giving them up.

Things went smoothly for the Supreme Court, which had not yet set itself up as arbiter of the constitution, until 1794 when Chief Justice Jay decided it would be more exciting to be governor of New York and he quit the bench.

Rutledge sent in his résumé again but some members of the Senate had come to distrust him for his anti-Federalist speeches. Washington gave him a recess appointment but it lasted only long enough for Congress to return and Rutledge was rejected, 14-10.

No candidate for the Supreme Court took rejection harder than Rutledge who tried to commit suicide by jumping into Charlestown Bay. But passersby fished him out and he lived the rest of his life as a recluse.

With l'affaire Rutledge out of the way, if you'll pardon the expression, Washington turned to Cushing, who actually held the commission as chief justice for a week before turning it down for ill health. The job went to Oliver Ellsworth of Connecticut.

Ill health or not, Cushing remained on the court until his death in 1810, the last of George Washington's original appointees to leave the court. He is buried in Scituate.

Tune into 'Our Town'

well have "a great school year". And alas the third grade might have a not-so-great year because no one thought to raise money for a teacher for them.

Perhaps another group will raise money to fund a fabulous art teacher for the eighth grade. That would be wonderful for this year's eighth graders, but what of next year's eighth graders, and what of all the other grades who maybe didn't have an art program at all.

Finally, who will speak for the students for whom there are no interest groups? Private money goes where private interest lies. Private funding is not the road to quality at all, but is more likely the road to inequality within our school system. That inequality is perpetuated across the country through the use of the property tax as an educational funding mechanism, with wealthier communities far outspending poorer communities. This inequity has been the subject of many court cases, with the courts ruling in favor of more equitable funding mechanisms, and in fact one such case drove Massachusetts' Education Reform efforts.

Adding teachers

Many have commented on the fact that adding teachers is crucial because "teachers equal education". While it is true that good teaching (and we have many wonderful teachers in Cohasset) is critical to student success, good teaching cannot stand alone. Teachers cannot teach without supplies, materials, and textbooks. Teachers cannot teach if there are not enough support staff and programs to provide for the needs of special education students. Teachers cannot teach if students come to school hungry and have not had breakfast or cannot afford lunch. Teachers cannot teach without adequate professional development opportunities. In this time of high stakes testing, teachers cannot teach without adequate curricular and administrative support. Are these items considered discretionary? Should they too be funded through private donations or fees? I think we should be asking Ms. Williams and Mr. Slanetz those questions. Just adding teaching positions does not make a great school system. There must be balance in the budget to provide all of the components (including art, music and sports) that are needed to guarantee a comprehensive education and a good outcome for all students.

I do not intend to be dismissive, but I feel can say with reasonable certainty, having had two children graduate from Cohasset Public Schools, that students will most likely make it through the school year this year without those extra positions. I do agree with one thing Mr. Slanetz wrote, and that is that we do not want to continue on a downward spiral. It is the role and the responsibility of the School Committee to ensure that that does not happen and there are ways to do that without privatizing our system. Educating themselves as to those roles and responsibilities as members of the School Committee is one way to do that. Hiring a solid CEO, letting them do their job without micro-managing that job is another. The Massachusetts Association of School Committees (MASC) has a code of ethics for its members which states "Give the chief administrator full responsibility for discharging his/her professional duties and hold him/her responsible for acceptable results.

I am very concerned that these attempts to "frame" the budget discussion only in terms of "cutting discretionary items" and "instituting user fees" represent an attempt at the much broader agenda of privatization of our public schools.

There are many factors that have contributed to the current budget shortfalls in Cohasset. State aid has been cut significantly over the past several years, special education costs have increased, health care coverage costs have increased, enrollment has increased and three new/renovated school buildings have come on line with resultant increased utility costs which have needed to be factored into the budget. Salaries, the largest part of the budget, also continue to increase.

As a member of the School Budget Investigation Committee, we were charged with determining the cause of the fiscal 2004 school budget shortfall. Many of these factors were discussed as contributors to the overall problem. With good planning and oversight, good management, and adequate budgetary communication between town and school administration, these factors would still have caused budget problems for our schools in some way. Our committee was asked to look specifically at the utilities bill overages at a specific point in time and under a specific school administration.

And while it is difficult to look at any part of the school budget without looking at all of the factors that impact the budget, what was clear to our committee was that our previous administration did not have a good handle on the budget in general and our recommendations reflected that. Our recommendations were not a call to end overrides, but to carefully plan, budget, and communicate in the future so that the town would have confidence in the numbers if and when an override was needed. Today, we have a much different administration and I feel they are meeting that challenge.

Inherited mess

Dr. Walsh has inherited a budget mess from her predecessor that continues to cause problems today. The most recent revelations about professional development costs that were under budgeted are just one more example of that. To her credit, Dr. Walsh has been extremely forthright about the budget issues she is faced with, and contacted the town finance manager as soon as she realized what was happening. She has already made difficult and unpopular staffing cuts. She has been open in her communications with the town about the budget and has instituted a strategic planning process that is inclusive of a wide range of key stakeholders (the school department had a strategic plan up until 1998, which was allowed to lapse during the previous administration). I believe that for taking those actions she deserves the respect and support of the community as she sorts this out. At the very least she deserves the respect and support of her School Committee in her recommendations on how to resolve the fiscal issues that she had no part in creating. I have not seen that kind of respect from some members of the School Committee.

It is the School Committee's responsibility to be an advocate for public education as a whole. They can do that by advocating at the state level for legislation that would improve local funding mechanisms. The MASC has a list of seven legislative priorities for 2005 on its web site. Five of those priorities, if enacted, would result in more funding for local communities. The letter offered by Dr. Walsh last week to the legislature asking for changes to 70B funding is a great example and one of those priorities. Additionally, they should be advocating at both the state and federal level for adequate funding for mandated services under Education Reform, the Individuals with Disabilities in Education Act (IDEA) and No Child Left Behind (NCLB). Locally, a committee was recently formed to look at bringing more business into the community to increase the tax base. Someone from the school department should either participate in or be a liaison to that committee, so that school funding issues are brought to the committee's attention.

Finally, at last week's meeting, Mr. Slanetz referred to the work done by Jonathan Kozol, a staunch advocate for public education. I had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Kozol speak at an MASC meeting when I was on the School Committee. I would highly recommend that current School Committee members take advantage of the workshops and other learning opportunities offered by MASC so that they are fully aware of the roles and responsibilities they have and that we all share as members of the larger community to publicly fund the education of our children. I have included a quote from Jonathan Kozol in closing that gets to the heart of the importance of equity in the funding of public education.

"We have a meritocracy of money in which good public education is passed on from one generation to the next. With privilege goes the opportunity to earn enough money so that you can live in a wealthy suburb and perpetuate this inequality by passing it on to your children. So long as these kinds of inequalities persist, all of us who are given expensive educations have to live with the knowledge that our victories are contaminated because the game has been rigged to our advantage.

"I have friends who are political and economic conservatives, wealthy people who send their children to private schools in New England at a cost of $25,000 to $30,000 a year. They ask me, 'Can you really solve these education problems by spending more money?' I generally respond by saying, 'It seems to do the trick for your children, doesn't it?'

"If high salaries for school teachers and small class size and attractive spacious buildings equipped with beautiful libraries and computers are good for the son or daughter of a president or a member of the Senate or a CEO, then they're also good for the poorest child in the Bronx. At heart this is a theological issue. I happen to be Jewish, but I've read the Gospel where Jesus says, 'If you love me, feed my sheep.' He didn't say only the sheep that dwell in the green pastures. He didn't say only the sheep whose parents make smart choices.'"

Absence of fireworks on Hill prior to Fourth

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

The government turned over the page on the calendar and the ledger last week, and to some degree felt as though it were turning a corner as well.

Even with $110 million in vetoes and the instant promise of overrides, the handling of this budget was a reasonably straightforward exercise devoid of nearly all the partisan tension associated with some recent budgets. That's largely due to a major milestone having been achieved: for the first time in a number of years, the state both exceeded its revenue benchmarks and witnessed revenues outpace the prior year.

It was pure coincidence, but as this turning point was reached, the final chapter of the Matt Amorello Saga apparently was written as well, and a definitive ending point was proclaimed for the Central Artery project. Hard as this may be to believe, the previous definitive ending point will not be achieved; though project managers had declared for years that major work on the Big Dig would wrap up by September, they said this week that January is a more realistic target for the end of major construction, and reconstruction, of the infamous passageway beneath Boston. January 2006 that is. The work will wrap up with a repair of the massive panel that gave way last September, and completion of the Kneeland Street on and off ramps.

Word of the January finish line came from the project's manager, Michael Lewis, who was meeting with the editors of the Boston Globe to discuss the tunnel repair. On that front, the Federal Highway Administration approved the faster, cheaper repair strategy advanced by the turnpike authority, in contrast to the route favored by a since-dismissed consultant the authority once turned to. That would have involved a complete rebuild of the failed tunnel panel, significant projects delays and further traffic headaches and, according to the authority, potential damage to nearby properties. Amorello's acknowledgement of the new timetable came the same day the Supreme Judicial Court effectively pronounced his job secure through the end of his term in 2007. The governor had asked the SJC to opine on whether he had the power to demote Amorello, who as an employee of the board of an independent authority enjoys a level of security not known by gubernatorial appointees who head regular executive agencies.

Romney had argued that the project's massive problems, and alleged turnpike obfuscation of efforts to detect and correct the defects and difficulties, warranted Amorello's removal, but he also said it was not clear he had the authority to remove his nemesis. He formally requested the court to rule on the matter, though some said he must have quietly hoped Amorello stayed in place, providing Mitt the Good a villain against whom to inveigh.

In any event, the Mitt vs. Matt tete a tete ended in a no-decision – the court said the governor had not invoked a "solemn occasion" dire enough to warrant a full review and judgment by the court. Romney's reaction was downbeat but low-key.

All in all, it was an upbeat lead-in to a long holiday weekend featuring a sunny forecast. The ongoing, heavy costs of keeping the defective tunnel maintained, along with health costs and other fiscal problems that necessitated the use of $600 million in reserve funds to cover the hole in this year's budget – those looming difficulties don't have to be faced right away. The Fourth of July may have been approaching, but what stood out about the week was the absence of fireworks.

• Fall River LNG plant approved by FERC — Romney was a lot more sanguine about the Amorello matter than about another decision announced. The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission approved a liquid natural gas offloading facility to be situated off the coast of Fall River. The battle is far from over: Attorney General Thomas Reilly said he'd move for a rehearing of the case before FERC. The governor pledged to continue fighting the project. "We'll kill this project with a thousand paper cuts," added Fall River Mayor Ed Lambert. "We'll use every avenue, legal, political, public relations and regulatory." For his part, Rhode Island Gov. Don Carcieri expressed pleasure with a separate FERC vote rejecting an LNG terminal in Providence, but concern over the prospect of LNG traffic through Narragansett Bay to and from Fall River. FERC said the project is needed to meet the energy demands of the Northeast.

• Another round of overrides sure to come as governor signs budget — The governor struck a moderate tone in announcing the veto of $110 million, or .42 percent of the budget. He cancelled a registration fee for the sex offender registry, saying it could discourage offenders from registering and that would be worse than the benefit of a $75 fee. He undid an employee-contribution reduction in state workers' health insurance plan, one of many vetoes that one could reasonably expect to be overridden. Legislative leaders vowed their branches will meet soon to undo the governor's vetoes they find most objectionable; a two-thirds vote in both branches is needed to override a veto. Other vetoes that drew attention included a $43 million reduction in the budget for nursing home reimbursements, and $907,000 for teen pregnancy prevention.

No. 120 ran aground spilling an estimated 98,000 gallons of oil in Buzzards Bay.

"We crafted some landmark legislation which passed one year to the date after that terrible event," she recalled, adding Massachusetts now has some of the toughest laws in the nation regarding oil spills.

"It was a very complex decision for me. I love this job."

-- Ellen Roy Herzfelder, Secretary of Environmental Affairs

Ellen Roy Herzfelder

Roy Herzfelder said another accomplishment of her office during her tenure has been the unification of the state park system. Two separate agencies, the Metropolitan District Commission and Department of Environmental Management, which had both operated under different management, came together to form the Department of Conservation and Recreation, which consolidated their respective resources and created a very strong park system.

"It's a tremendous legacy," she said.

Living in Cohasset, Roy Herzfelder said coastal issues are very close to her heart. She said she has worked on various initiatives to protect land along all of the Massachusetts coastline, adding there are roughly 1,000 acres of protected coastline in the South Shore area alone.

"In our region, in our own backyard, we have a real emphasis on oceans," she said.

Roy Herzfelder has attended many events in Cohasset to celebrate the environmental projects that are taking place in town, including the ribbon cutting ceremony for the Center for Student Coastal Research, events to celebrate the recycling efforts of the South Shore Recycling Cooperative, and to present grants to various groups in the community, including the water department.

Roy Herzfelder said because of her many duties as Secretary of Environmental Affairs, she was able to travel to many communities and meet many people throughout the state, which she said was very enjoyable and something she will miss. But spending more time in the town she calls home will surely be a welcome change.

Area residents to advise water company

Seven South Shore residents, one from Cohasset, will be advising a Massachusetts water company on issues of importance to its customers. Aquarion Water Company recently formed a Customer Advisory Council. Representing the South Shore are Robert Gaughen of North Cohasset; Allison Ferrante, Roger Sullivan, Calvin Wilbur of Hingham; and Rick Mattila, Jay Meschino, Michael Nuesse of Hull.

According to Aquarion senior vice resident Larry Bingaman, the mission of the Customer Advisory Council is to provide advice on and assist with the development of policies and strategies to enhance Aquarion's customer service, communications and community relations.

"These individuals have agreed to meet on a quarterly basis but will be kept abreast of important company news via fax, email or telephone calls between meetings," Bingaman said. "The council's inaugural meeting was the evening of June 8, when we had a substantive discussion of issues of mutual concern, such as water supply planning, the permitting of Free Street Well #4 and the Cohasset Interconnection," he noted. Customers can contact the members of the Customer Advisory Council by emailing advisorycouncil@aquarion.com.

A year to remember

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

The 2006 Cohasset boys lacrosse team will have a lot to live up to.

This year's squad truly made a name for itself, as one of the smallest schools in the state advanced all the way to the Div. 3 state final against Medfield.

"We had a great season," says Skippers head coach Stew Curran. "To get to that point is a credit to the hard work the kids did in the off-season."

Included in those off-season activities are a variety of indoor lacrosse leagues in Plymouth, Pembroke and Hingham.

"In those leagues, the Cohasset kids usually play together as a team," Curran said. "They are always learning the nuances that they have to work on."

Next year's squad will be a very young one, as 12 athletes from this year's team have graduated from Cohasset High School: Leo Clougherty, Colin Regan, Crandon Leahy, Jon Grimm, Casey Coleman, Sam Steele, Bill Carbone, Chris Simms, Joe Durkin, Matt Casey, Jake Previte and Kevin Dinsmore.

Previte leaves CHS as the program's all-time leading scorer, a mark he set at the end of the regular season. Despite being constantly face-guarded by opponents, Previte racked up 86 points this year, second on the team to Aidan Buick's 99.

"They're as good a pair of attackmen as there is in the South Shore, other than Duxbury," Curran said.

Leahy was one of the best defenseman in the area, and was recognized for his talents by being selected to play in the Eastern Mass All-Star Game, the only Skipper to do so. Curran says Leahy, who will be attending prep school next year, is "scratching the surface of his lacrosse potential," which the coach says could ultimately see him playing for a Div. 1 program.

Coleman and Dinsmore were both solid performers for the defense, with Coleman earning the Pilgrim Conference Sportsmanship Award.

The Skippers also lose their top middy in Durkin, a face-off specialist who was one of the league's top two-way players. Cohasset also loses a couple solid midfield pluggers in Steele and Casey.

The bottom line is, there are certainly a lot of holes to fill. But as Curran points out, the team lost nine seniors from the '04 squad, so there is precedent here for Cohasset being able to bounce back from big graduation losses.

Buick, now a senior, will lead the attack. He figures to garner the same kind of attention from opposing defenses that Previte got this year, so others will have to step up. Leading that group will be sophomore Mike Grimm, who has a mid-season call-up from the JVs this year had a number of multiple-goal games.

Trevor Brady, Dan Trendowicz and Charlie Czerkawski are the returning middies who saw the most playing time this year. Brady is a solid passer and stick-handler, and Czerkawski is a candidate to take over Durkin's role as the team's face-off guy. Ryan Kaczynski, a long-stick middy also played well down the stretch and into the playoffs for Cohasset, and will see increased time on the field next year.

The defense will be led by junior Jeff Brown, a talented athlete who will likely one of the league's best at his position next year. The defense will be playing in front of senior goalie Ben Libby, who had a great postseason in net for Cohasset.

The Seadogs will head to Myrtle Beach, South Carolina in two weeks to compete in the Division 1 National AAU baseball Championships.

Little Leaguers making waves

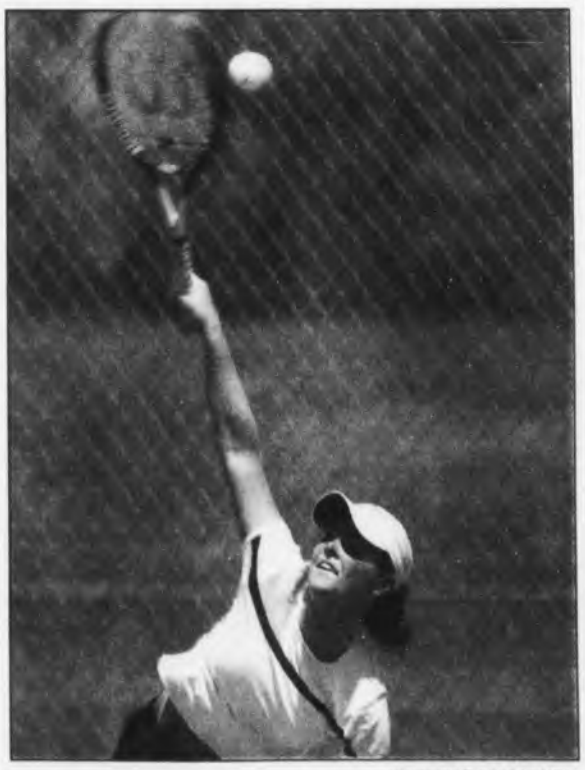
The Cohasset Little League baseball team was undefeated in the District 8 Little League Baseball Tournament heading into last night's game with Hingham.

That game, played in Braintree at 6 p.m., featured two undefeated teams. The tournament is double-elimination, so even with a loss, Cohasset would live to play another day.

They got to this point by virtue of a great come-from-behind win against Braintree American last Saturday morning in Stoughton.



In that game, Robert Jones was the hero when he blasted a two-out, two-strike pitch over the fence for a two-run walkoff homer in the bottom of the sixth.

Anders Goetz, Robbie Hill and Luke Ernst each had two hits for Cohasset while Gabe Seksay added a two-run homer of his own. Goetz tossed a complete game, striking out eight.

All-Scholastic girls tennis team

Stone, Anderson, Meehan represent Cohasset

Cohasset's Elizabeth Stone, Meg Anderson and Sally Meehan have been selected to the Mariner's 2005 All-Scholastic girls tennis team.

Athletes from the public schools of Marinerland's 13 towns are considered: Abington, Braintree, Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Holbrook, Kingston (Silver Lake HS), Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Rockland, Scituate and Weymouth.

Next week, we publish our All-Scholastic baseball team.

Singles

Elizabeth Stone - Senior (Capt.)
First Singles - Cohasset

Finished her outstanding high school career with another great year as a senior…Lost only once in team match play, and was rarely in danger of even losing a set…Ends her career with just one loss in South Shore League play…A league All-Star all four y ears at CHS…Went undefeated as a sophomore and junior for teams that won the Div. 2 state title in 2003 and the Div. 2 South

Elizabeth Stone

sectional title in 2004…Was 3-0 in tournament play this year, all routine straight-set victories Advanced to the finals of the South sectional individuals tournament for the third straight year…Can play at net or on the baseline with equal ease, and gets better and stronger as the match goes on…Has played in many USTA tournaments, and has always been among the top-ranked USTA players for her age group…An excellent student who graduated as one of the top students in her class…Will attend Middlebury College in Vermont, where she will play tennis for a program that has developed into one of the best Div. 3 teams in the country

Meaghan Doyle - Senior
First singles - Hingham

One of the best players in the Patriot League throughout her HHS career, Doyle capped another solid season this spring…A four-year starter at first singles, Doyle had the difficult task of taking on some of the area's best talent…Played a pair of close matches against fellow All-Scholastics Elizabeth Stone of Cohasset and Lindsay Horne of Scituate during the regular season, and beat Norwell's Taylor Cleaves in the South Individual tourney…This four-year Patriot League All-star's solid play at No. 1 helped Hingham (10-6) qualify for post-season play in the Div. 2 South Sectional, where they topped Hopkinton before falling to Norwell, an eventual finalist…During her tenure, Doyle helped pace the Harborwomen to a trio of PL titles, this year being the first without one at 9-4…Recruited by Div. 3 Wheaton, Doyle will continue her tennis career there. Hingham coach Deb Boles: "Losing Meaghan is a huge loss to the program. She was a cut above everyone else on the team as far as talent and ability, but she was willing to hit with anyone, anytime. She never put herself ahead of anyone. She was as strong as she was mature."

Susan Bitetti - Freshman
First singles - Norwell

Had as memorable a season as a freshman can have…Won the South sectional of the state individuals tournament, defeating fellow All-Scholastic Elizabeth Stone of Cohasset in the final…Gave defending state champion Shivani Dave of Concord-Carlisle a tough match in the state semifinals June 18 in Worcester…Only loss of the year in team play came to Stone on April 26; other than that, she was an automatic point for Norwell at first singles, rarely losing more than one game in a set…Also won all four of her matches in the state team tournament…South Shore League All-Star…Hard to find a hole in her game…Serves, forehands and backhands are all strong, and she runs down absolutely everything, much to the frustration of her opponents…Rated in the top-5 in the USTA's New England 16-and-under rankings…Served as treasurer for the freshman class at NHS this year…Norwell coach Judy Field: "I had heard about Susan coming into this year, obviously, but I didn't know she would be this good. She played a lot of big matches, and I'm not sure how many freshmen would have handled it in that kind of manner."

Taylor Cleaves - Junior
Second singles - Norwell

Moved up from third to second singles this year, and lost only once (in the season opener)…Quick, strong athlete with a hard, accurate shot…Went undefeated in South Shore League play this year, earning league All-Star honors…Had a 4-0 record in team tournament play, including three-set matches against Mansfield and Old Rochester…Cleaves says those two and her three-set win in Scituate in mid-April were her highlights for the season…Proved herself to be a clutch player, as the Scituate and OR matches were 2-2 with second singles the last point to be determined…Won her first round match in the state individuals tournament…Became a serious tennis player in the eighth grade…Will be a team co-captain next year, along with fellow All-Scholastic Kathryn Ankner…Also a co-captain for the soccer team this fall…Plans on playing tennis in college, where she will study business…Norwell coach Judy Field: "Taylor is a motivated, determined player. After that first loss, she made it a point to not let it happen again, and it didn't."

Lindsay Horne - Junior (Capt.)
First singles - Scituate

Another outstanding year for the Scituate star: 15-2 overall, 11-0 in Patriot League play, 4-0 in the postseason…Also advanced to the second day of competition of the state individuals tournament, one of only eight athletes in the South sectional to do so…Won the deciding match in her team's big postseason win at Barnstable…League All-Star for the third straight year, including one such honor as part of a doubles team…Switched between first and second singles with teammate and fellow All-Scholastic Brittany Miller, with a majority of her matches coming at first singles…An intelligent player who can break down an opponent's strategy and counteract it…Comes from a tennis family, and her father owns the Scituate Racquet and Fitness Club…Plays soccer in the fall for SHS, and enjoys skiing in the winter…Will be a co-captain for the tennis team again next season…Scituate coach Bob Beatty: "Lindsay is a tenacious player who never gives up; she fought back whenever she had to. She is also a great leader; it was wonderful to watch what she did with her captaincy this year."

Brittany Miller - Senior (Capt.)
Second singles - Scituate

Concluded her high school career with a remarkable 45-2 record…Was a clutch player for Scituate throughout her four years, with this season being no different, as her big win over Hingham's Meaghan Doyle on May 26 helped propel the Sailors to another Patriot League title…A league All-Star once again this season…A great baseline player who simply out-hits and outlasts opponents, with long points a trademark of many Miller matches… plays tennis year round at the Weymouth Club and has competed in many USTA tourneys…Won USTA U-16 Challenger Tourney in Nashua, NH two summers ago…Will attend Union College in Schenectady, NY, where she will likely continue her tennis career…Scituate coach Bob Beatty: "For four years, I knew that with Brittany in the second or third spot, we would always win. She just outlasts any person she plays."

Doubles

Meg Anderson/Sally Meehan
First Doubles - Cohasset

The scary part for future Cohasset opponents? These two were just freshman this year, and have three more seasons to go…Both played a variety of roles for the Skippers, playing some singles and with various doubles partners…When they were together, though, they were nearly impossible to beat…Advanced to the final four of the South sectional in the individuals tournament, losing to the eventual sectional champs from Barnstable…Virtually an automatic point at first doubles come team tournament time…Went 3-0 for Cohasset in the postseason, often dominating…Meehan, daughter of Cohasset head coach Gigi Meehan, features a blistering serve that, when on target, is extremely tough to return…Anderson is one of the team's best all-around players, and particularly excelled at net during doubles matches…Anderson also won some key matches at singles, including the lone point in a team loss to Ursuline in April…Whether it is as a tandem again next year or they move up to the singles ranks, both figure to give opponents fits in '06 and the two years after that

Alex Hosea/Jess Hatfield
First Doubles - Hingham

Playing with each other for the last two seasons, the all-senior duo of captains Hosea and Hatfield continued Hingham's strong doubles tradition…Coupling Hatfield's tennis skills with Hosea's all-around athleticism, this duo was one of the most feared teams in the Patriot League and beyond…The pair dropped only one match in league and was seeded among the top teams in the South Individual tourney…There, Hosea and Hatfield reached the semifinals…The duo helped guide the Harborwomen to a 10-6 regular season campaign and berth in the Div. 1 South tourney…There, Hosea and Hatfield defeated a tandem from Hopkinton and notched the only victory in the Hingham's 4-1 loss to eventual finalists, Norwell…The two made the PL All-star team for the second-straight season…Hatfield plans to attend Boston College in the fall, while Hosea—who also played basketball at HHS—moves on to Syracuse University. Hingham coach Deb Boles: "Jess had the skills and Alex had the athleticism. Jess was more of a polished player with a great ground stroke. She'd set up the points and Alex would put them away. Whoever takes over will have big shoes to fill."

Kasey Talbot/Caroline Bagby
First Doubles - Marshfield

Teaming up nearly midway through the season, Talbot, a junior, and Bagby, a sophomore, proved to be a lethal combination at first doubles…Traditionally strong at the position, the pair did the Lady Rams proud, dropping only three matches during the regular season, two coming against South doubles champs and state finalists Donnolly and Lacey of Barnstable…For their efforts, the duo received Old Colony League All-star recognition. Talbot's second and Bagby's first…The duo helped pace Marshfield to a solid 13-3 regular season campaign, while going 4-2 in the OCL to finish second behind Barnstable…In the Div. 1 South tourney, the pair fueled a 4-1 victory over New Bedford and 5-0 win over Sharon before falling to South finalist Newton North in the quarterfinals…Talbot is making her second appearance on the All-Scholastic squad, teaming with the graduated Erin McElaney last year…Both players will return to the MHS team next spring. Marshfield coach Roberta Daniele: "Kasey has been at it for two years and she knows doubles really well. She's very consistent. Caroline is more aggressive. She never gets rattled. They were so good together."

Carly Arena (Capt.)/ Kathryn Ankner
First Doubles - Norwell

After playing together last year as well, the Clippers duo stepped it up this year and won a number of key matches for their team before being split up in mid-May (as Ankner moved to third singles)…Were one of the final eight teams in the South sectional of the individuals tournament…Skills complimented one another well: Arena possesses a strong forehand and plays very well at net, while Ankner has an effective backhand and will hit anything back from the baseline…South Shore League All-Stars as a doubles team…After the split, Ankner lost only once, with one of her biggest wins coming May 12 over Cohasset in a 3-2 victory that gave Norwell the league title…Arena played with Rachel Thomas at first doubles down the stretch, a team that beat Duxbury in the season finale and earned a straight-set win against Mansfield in the state team tournament…Arena, who will attend Quinnipiac University and study to be a physician assistant (a six-year, master's degree program), was also a four-year member of the gymnastics team at Norwell…Hopes to continue playing tennis at Quinnipiac…Ankner has played tennis since she was eight, and still has weekly lessons with coach Mike Davis…A summer lifeguard who also coaches the South Shore YMCA Sharks swim team, Ankner also takes voice lessons and is a member of the Decibelles, an a cappella group at Norwell High School…Ankner, who plays field hockey in the fall and is a cheerleader in the winter season, will be a co-captain next year with teammate and fellow All-Scholastic Taylor Cleaves, and is also a co-captain for the field hockey team this fall

Katie Werner (Capt.)/ Emily Werner
First Doubles - Scituate

The sisters went 11-3 as a team this year, and were named to the Patriot League All-Star team (along with teammates Lindsay Horne and Brittany Miller)…Played primarily in the first doubles spot this season, after playing second doubles toward the end of last year…Scored a couple big wins over Norwell during the course of the season…Advanced to the third round of the state individuals tournament with two wins in the competition, which Katie says is one of the duo's biggest highlights of the season…Have both played tennis since they were six years old…Biggest strength lies in the fact that they know each other's game very well, and have strong techniques because of their experience…Come into every match with a determined mindset…Both play soccer for SHS and ski in the winter…Katie, who says she has always enjoyed science, moves on to Union College in Schenectady, NY where she wants to study neurobiology and psychology…Emily figures to play a big role in the team next year as a junior, and will be a co-captain with Horne…Scituate coach Bob Beatty: "Being sisters, Katie and Emily have a camaraderie with one another that is rare for any doubles team. Katie was a great leader on this team that the younger kids looked up to, and I think Emily will follow in her sister's footsteps next year."

OBITUARIES

Isatta J. Fortier

Loved listening to music

Isatta J. "Izzie" Fortier, age 5, of Cohasset, died at her home on June 2, 2005, of respiratory failure.

Isatta was born with Hydmencephaly, a rare condition in which the brain's cerebral hemispheres are absent and replaced by sacs filled with cerebrospinal fluid. Although severely restricted in bodily and mental function, it was clear to all who knew her that Issie thrived on attention. She liked to be held, talked to, sung to, and appreciated listening to music.

From birth, Izzie was the foster child of sisters, Leslie and Laura Fortier, who later adopted her. She was a very special blessing for their family and regarded as a precious gift, who gave far more than she received.

She leaves her beloved adoptive parents, Leslie and Laura Fortier of Cohasset; several family members, neighbors, Cohasset residents, and friends.

Interment in Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset. Arrangements by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Contributions in Issie's memory may be made to the Boston Adoption Bureau, 14 Beach St., Suite #616, Boston, MA 02108.

Luca A. DeLisi

Brought special joy to many

Luca Andrew DeLisi, 3 year-old son of Jeffrey and Megan (Tomassio) DeLisi, died June 29, 2005, peacefully in his mother's arms, at home in Scituate.

Luca was diagnosed with large cell Medullablastoma, a rare form of brain and spinal cancer in January 2005. Throughout his ordeal, he fought with incredible courage and a loving inner strength fueled by the very strong bond he shared with his mother and his father. Luca was proud and beautiful. He had a unique talent to capture people's hearts with his dimpled smile and expressive eyes.

Luca A. DeLisi

Born on a sunny, snowy Feb. 27, 2002, he was all-boy. He loved to climb rocks, run fast, and play in the sand with his trucks at the beach. He enjoyed trains, the New York Yankees, his family and friends, and most of all, sharing every day to the fullest with his mom and dad.

He leaves his loving parents Jeffrey and Megan; his maternal grandparents Jerry and Mary Tomassio of Garrison, N.Y.; his paternal grandparents Frank and Barbara DeLisi of Brewster; his aunt Jill Tomassio Heitmann, aunt Tara and John Thom, uncle Gerard and Noreen Tomassio, aunt Beth DeLisi and Ralph Baird; his beloved cousins John and Dominic Thom; Jake, Ramsey and Daniel Heitmann; Michael and Nolan Tomassio; and Parker, James, and Elizabeth Baird.

A Mass of the Angels was held at Saint Mary of the Nativity in Scituate Harbor. Arrangements by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Corwin's quest lands him at the Music Circus

Jeff Corwin

After spending the last 14 months traveling to 17 different countries shooting episodes of his new Animal Planet series, "Corwin's Quest," Jeff Corwin spent some rare time off at home in Marshfield a few weeks ago. For the Emmy Award-winner now in his 10th year on television, that didn't mean putting his feet up.

"I'm so glad to be home with my wife and daughter," said Corwin, 37, by telephone. "And my deck is covered with flowers just waiting to be planted."

The wildlife biologist did more than yard work during his time off. He also prepared for the two live shows he will do at the South Shore Music Circus on July 9 to benefit the EcoZone at the private, non-profit South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell. "I want the details to be a surprise, but people who come can count on seeing things as long as long can be and as heavy as heavy can be. The shows will be all about humor, energy and plenty of audience participation," says the Norwell native."I only do live shows when I absoloutely need to. But they are a great way to raise money for the EcoZone, a very special place which I am very rooted in."

EcoZone's roots date to 1999 when Corwin collaborated with the South Shore Natural Science Center on an exhibit area to teach children and adults about the natural wonders found in southeastern Massachusetts. Features of the EcoZone, which opened in January 2002, include live pond exhibits complete with water, vegetation, frogs, fish, and turtles.

Saturday's Music Circus shows — as well an adults-only event that evening at the South Shore Natural Science Center - are designed to sustain and grow the EcoZone.

"Initially, we were raising money for an idea. Now, it is 80 percent complete. People in Norwell, Scituate and the surrounding areas should be very proud of what has already been accomplished with their support. There are just a few exhibits left to be created."

The telegenic Corwin — chosen in 2002 as one of "People" magazine's "50 Most Beautiful People" — may spend much of his time circling the globe, but he remains devoted to the place he calls home. "My work today is very much based on what I learned growing up on the South Shore. We have unique wildlife, beautiful forests and pretty rivers, too. It is why I still live here today. The feedback I get from my television viewers is that they want to see orangutans and such, but I also want to make sure that they don't forget the natural beauty in their own backyards."

Jeff Corwin will present shows at 10:30 AM and 1:30 PM on Saturday, July 9 at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier Street, Cohasset. For general tickets and information, call 617-931-2787 or visit www.themusiccircus.org <http://www.themusiccircus.org>. There are also a limited number of premium seats for both shows. Please call the Natural Science Center at 781-659-2559 for more details. Also on July 9, Corwin and singer Susan Tedeschi will co-host an adults-only party, "Wild Blue Night," from 6-9 PM at the South Shore Natural Science Center, Jacob's Lane, Norwell. The gathering will feature entertainment by the James Montgomery Band. Tickets are $100 and are available by calling 781-659-2559. Proceeds from the shows and "Wild Blue Night" will benefit the EcoZone.

Ronan Tynan brings his Irish tenor to Cohasset

Ronan Tynan

As a founding member of "The Irish Tenors," singer Ronan Tynan - who plays the South Shore Music Circus on Sunday - has performed to sold-out audiences all over the world. The Dubliner didn't tour his home country as a solo performer, however, until this year. "I had given concerts in Ireland, of course, but never on a full-scale tour," explained Tynan, 45, by telephone from his New York home last week. "It was to be my first solo work in Ireland since I left the Tenors and I was afraid my 'sell-by' date might have come and gone. You can never really be sure how people are going to feel about you after you leave a group like the Tenors. Ireland ended up being my first-ever, fully sold-out tour, however, and it was just fantastic."

But it was not without challenge for the Trinity College-educated medical doctor who, disabled from birth, had both legs amputated at age 20 following a car accident. "One of my artificial legs broke one hour before I was to sing for Mary McAleese, the President of Ireland, at the National Concert Hall in Dublin," says Tynan who set numerous track and field records while winning eight gold medals in the Paralympics. "I had to send for a temporary replacement limb. These things happen, but I was still able to give my full performance - just a little later than planned. During that same period, I was also supposed to fly to Washington, D.C. to perform for Nancy Reagan at an event marking her return to Washington, D.C. Unfortunately, I had to have my leg repaired and so I had to miss that concert."

Tynan's recent concerts in Ireland and worldwide have been in support of his new album, "Ronan," released March 1on the Decca/Universal label. "For the first time, I'm singing material of tremendous depth and weight, and a greater of variety of music beyond just the classic Irish tenor vein. I like it very much, because I always want to do something new. With this album, I get to do sing contemporary songs by people like Richard Marx and Desmond Childs. I also co-wrote a song called 'Passing Through' which was inspired by mother's battle with Alzheimer's."

Well-known for his frequent renditions of "God Bless America" at New York Yankees games at Yankee Stadium, Tynan is also well-aware that Cohasset is in the heart of Red Sox Nation.

"I love coming to Massachusetts. What will make this show intriguing is that now the Red Sox are World Champions," says Tynan, who has been known to flaunt his Yankees ring. "I knew nothing of the rivalry between the two teams way back when I first sang at Yankee stadium. I do remember, though, that it was the Yankees over the Red Sox, 8-2, that day. Now, I just love the patriotism, love of the game and and love of country I feel when I sing at a baseball game."

He may prefer his players in pinstripes, but Tynan still has respect for the Red Sox and their hometown. "(Red Sox Captain) Jason Varitek is a fantastic leader of a great team. And the first show I ever did in the U.S. was in Boston, so the City will always have a very warm place in my heart."

Ronan Tynan will perform at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier Street, Cohasset, on Sunday, July 10 at 7:30 PM. For tickets and information, call 617-931-2787 or visit www.themusiccircus.org.

MUSIC TO THEIR EARS?

A recent survey posted on MTV's website shows that most teenagers and young adults do not think that hearing loss from listening to loud music is a big problem, even though three out of five of them have had ringing in their ears after concerts. According to researchers from the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary, only 8% of those questioned believed that post-concert hearing loss was a big problem. Sixty-eight of those questioned experienced ringing in their ears or other signs of hearing impairment after attending concerts, and 43% reported the same from socializing in clubs. However, when told that loud music could result in life-long hearing loss, 66% in the study said that fact motivated them to wear hearing protection.

Although we are usually quick to accuse teenagers of not paying attention to protecting their hearing, what about the noise pollution we adults constantly heap on our ears in our jobs and just in our normal daily activities? At FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, we want to do all we can to help you become aware of the importance of protecting your hearing and the ways you can improve the quality of life through clear sound and communication. Please stop by 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Building in Weymouth, and find out what's new in the hearing instrument industry.

P.S. Several studies from across the world report an increasing trend toward noise induced hearing loss.

Palm Island Resort perfects Florida's wild side

By MIKE ADASKAVEG

CAPE HAZE, Fla. - "Let's take a trip to natural Florida," I told my kids, explaining Florida doesn't always have to be loud roller coaster rides and sweltering lines to grab a moment with Mickey.

"How about riding on a warm Gulf wave and watching the performance of a showy flock of orange-beaked black skimmers diving for food?" I suggested. "Or, enjoying the caressing Gulf breezes as you catch a glimpse of a basking manatee in a bay long ago frequented by pirates stashing their booty?"

I got looks as though I had suggested a trip to the candy store without any intention of buying candy.

Nevertheless, our family of five arrived here at the dead end of the intercoastal waterway and waited as a tiny flat car ferry crossed to pick us up to take us to my choice of destination - Palm Island Resort.

With a white beard hiding a face that had a hundred stories, "Bushy Bob," a k a Owen Lewis, peered from the wheelhouse.

"If you're staying at the resort, they're paying, if you're not, we charge $50," he snarled. He wasn't kidding. The short ferry ride could easily be replaced by a bridge, but it hasn't and it won't be.

"That's what keeps Palm Island quiet and natural," he added. "If you were driving a truck, it would be $300."

The resort's cottages and villas (summer season rates are from $1,685 to $3,035 per week) are connected by twisting, white crushed-shell roads lined with a variety of colorful flora beneath sable palms and mangroves. No cars are allowed on the resort - they're left in a parking lot as electric golf carts become the prime mode of transportation.

STAFF PHOTOS/MIKE ADASKAVEG

Days are passed on Palm Island searching for the perfect seashell.

Red Beard the Pirate and his sidekick, Bones the parrot, get acquainted with a young Palm Island visitor.

Our two-bedroom villa (summer season rates $2,265 per week) opened onto an oceanside screened porch. An abundance of windows helped the soft, steady breezes from the Gulf of Mexico flow through to the full kitchen and out the front door. The warm turquoise waters and white sand beach were just five steps off a small deck.

Five heated swimming pools with whirlpool spas are spaced between the resort's various buildings, surrounded by palms to offer a break from the sun and sand.

When the kids spotted the pools, they quickly forgot about the amusement parks.

Palm Island is sometimes compared to Sanibel, the latter slightly more commercial. Searching for the perfect periwinkle or some petrified tiger shark teeth is what takes up most of the day here. The resort's staff advised us where the "secret spots" were and we found the tides always replenish the supply of treasures, so beachcombing offered endless surprises.

My best find was a perfectly intact blowfish, dried hard by the sun. The kids quickly fixated on the many varieties of shells - cockles, Florida Fighting Conch, jingles, and coquina, to name a few. My wife was obsessed with finding sharks' teeth as she proclaimed Palm Island better than Sanibel and even Captiva for finding such rarities.

The resort's general store sells plastic-coated guides with color photos of what you could find on the beach.

Long days beachcombing build strong appetites, and the resort store offered all the basic groceries and more - you can order the fresh fish of the day and grill it yourself at grills alongside any of the pools which also are equipped with tables. We did just that on a couple of occasions at marinated some grouper, made a tossed salad and added a bottle of wine to watch the big orange ball sink into the shimmering blue gulf.

Adults may relish the peaceful downtime, but kids have to keep moving. The resort features two forms of entertainment for them - the Club Seadew kids' program and the infamous Red Beard the Pirate.

This "Red Beard" is more than the average entertainer. He weaves history and lore of local pirates into stories and songs sung around a campfire. He also taught our kids how to make sharks' tooth necklaces and tie-dyed bandanas. With his inseparable parrot partner, "Bones," he took the kids and parents on tours to catch brown anoles and watch fiddler crabs pop in and out of their holes.

The occupation of our kids in Red Beard's programs allowed for some more serious observation of nature. Retired Connecticut firefighter Al Squiers works his shift patrolling the resort in the emergency services' golf cart, then delves into his passion of being one of two naturalists working on the property.

Squiers was quick to name the common and scientific name of every plant - from the invasive Brazilian Pepper to the brilliant yellow beavertail cactus blooming on the dunes. He gives tours on land and sea, and we spent a couple of hours with him just observing birds and plants.

A red spec in a palm caught Squiers' eye. He slammed on the brakes of the cart and pointed out a scarlet tanager - bright red with black wings - a beautiful and rare sight.

On a walk to the far end of the beach, you come to roped-off areas protecting nesting birds like the plovers and skimmers. Respectful of birds, Squiers moved in slowly to observe the skimmers swooping the water, filling their slender beaks with fish. He later brought us close to an osprey nest, where the young were being fed just above the calm bay waters where manatees are commonly seen.

From mid-June until October, sea turtles are also among the common sights. Naturalists and observers head up the resort's "Turtle Patrol," a turtle awareness program. There are loggerhead turtle awareness walks at daybreak, and guests help mark the nests so they will not be disturbed.

When it was time to depart Palm Island, tears actually welled up in my kids' eyes. Amazingly, there was no mention of the amusement parks. We left with a new appreciation of the state of Florida - and a couple of boxes of great sea shells, sharks' teeth, and a blow fish.

Spindrift Lane parking curbed

Beach-goers are biggest problem

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Beach-goers looking for free parking will no longer find it on Spindrift Lane. The private way will soon be outfitted with "no parking" signs. Violators can be fined.

Fed up with sharing their street with out-of-towners and even some fellow residents looking for free and easy access to Black Rock Beach, all five Spindrift Lane households banded together to sign a petition asking the board of selectmen to enforce a parking ban.

Those who live on the street, located off Forest Avenue, say they have witnessed cars parking in front of driveways and mailboxes, they have seen teenagers both drinking on the street and leaving their cars to head to the beach with alcohol. Garbage, including empty beer cans, is often left behind for homeowners to clean up.

Bill Costello, 8 Spindrift Lane, said he has noticed a steady increase in the number of cars parking on the street and many do not belong to Cohasset residents.

"I've lived there for 23 years, and it's been a problem more in

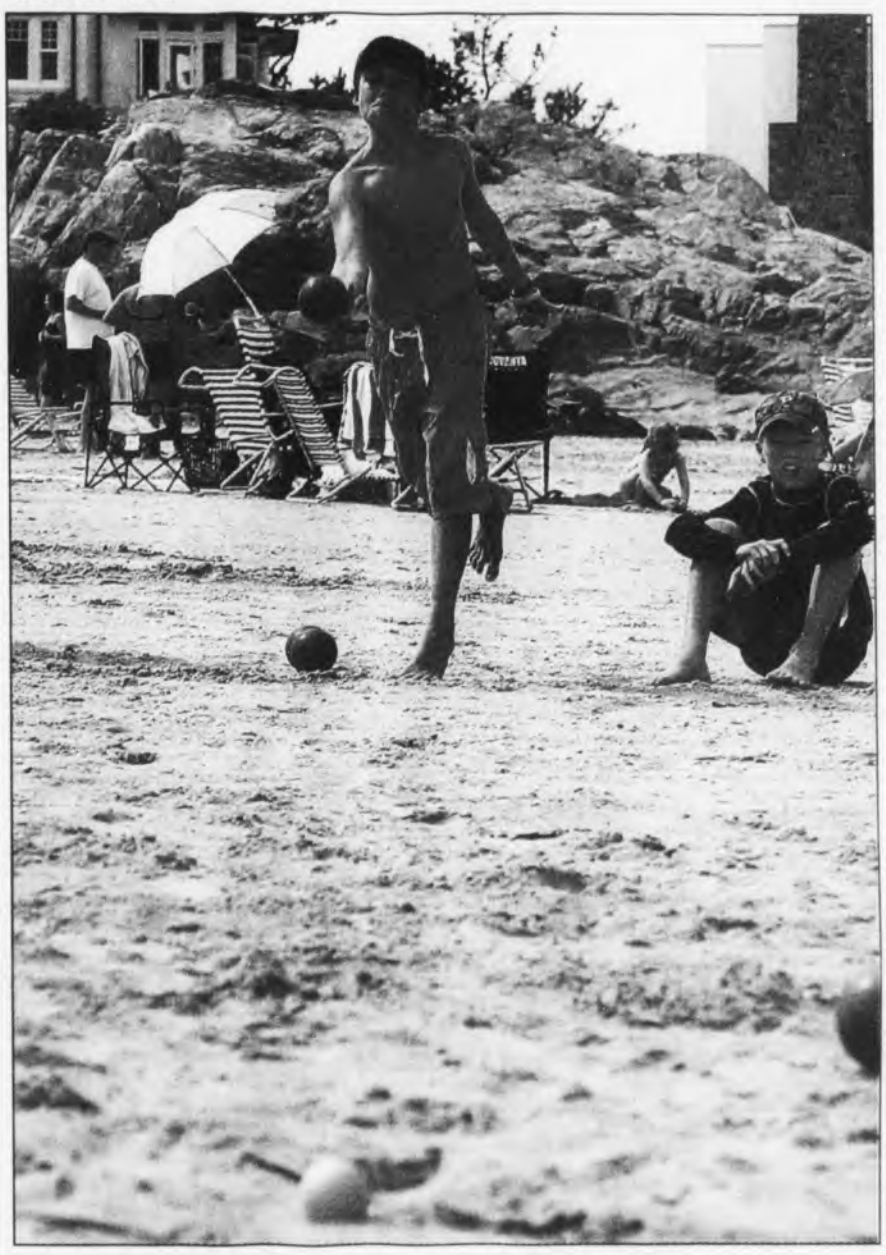
DiNero's rolls dice for Keno

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

DiNero's restaurant has decided to try its luck again by reapplying for a Keno license with the Massachusetts State Lottery Commission.



The restaurant has been in pursuit of a license since 2002, and all along the way the issue has been full of contention. Neighbors felt the game would draw more traffic to the area and with the number of families which live nearby, as well as the Nativity-Assumption of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church in close proximity, felt offering the game was simply not appropriate.

In light of feedback from abutters, selectmen voted in June 2002 to deny DiNero's request for a Keno license. The request then went before the Massachusetts State Lottery Commission, which has the authority to issue the license. The lottery commission upheld the selectmen's ruling.

However, the restaurant has undergone a significant renovation which has expanded the parking lot. In light of those developments, selectmen have agreed to hear the restaurant's request again and will hold a public hearing to discuss the issue Tuesday, July 26.

Arrows aren't doing the job

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Motorists, who wonder whether the left-turn arrows on the lights on Rte. 3A at Beechwood Street are working properly, aren't alone.

Police Chief James Hussey says unless a northbound vehicle stops right at or past the stop line, the left-turn arrow is not triggered. Therefore, those making a left-hand turns onto Beechwood Street have to wait for a gap without the safety of a green turn-arrow and a red light stopping oncoming traffic.

For those travelling southbound, the left-turn arrow doesn't work at all, he said.

This creates a safety hazard at what is one of the more dangerous intersections in town.

Hussey said MassHighway is supposed to send someone out. Jon Carlisle, spokesman for the state Transportation Office, also confirmed MassHighway engineers would address the problem.

The traffic light with left-turning arrows was installed three years ago. Northbound traffic is supposed to move first with those turning left onto Beechwood Street (toward Shaw's) turning on the green arrow.

Following that, both north and

Pilot program with Norwell takes off

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Selectmen have given the go-ahead for Cohasset to enter into a cooperative agreement with the town of Norwell. The two towns will share the services of one animal control officer and split the costs incurred, which will free up some money in the fiscal 2006 budget on both sides.

"It's a great solution to the financial challenges both towns face," said Town Manager Bill Griffin, adding it will lessen expenses for both towns and begin a partnership that could prompt other regional programs in the future.

Griffin explained Cohasset will compensate the animal control officer for 20 hours per week for his normal duties, which is included in the fiscal 2006 budget. While on duty, the officer will respond to calls in both Cohasset and Norwell. Any calls to Norwell

Laid to rest on foreign soil

WWI soldiers died 87 years ago

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Cohasset residents George H. Mealy and Lawrence B. Williams may have never crossed paths on the road of life. Instead, they walked parallel paths as they were both members of the Massachusetts National Guard who were sent to fight in France during World War I. Both were mortally wounded just two days apart and both were laid to rest more than 4,000 miles from home.

Eighty-seven years ago on July 17 and 19, 1918, Cohasset lost two brave young men, as both Mealy and Williams paid the ultimate price in the name of freedom during the battle of Chateau-Thierry in Fismes, France. Mealy, who died at the age of 28, was a sergeant and a member of Company K, 101st Infantry Yankee Division, while Williams, then 25, was a corporal with Battery A 101 Field Artillery.

Born to George W. Mealy and Charlotte Otis (Snow) Mealy on Nov. 10, 1889, George H. Mealy spent his childhood in and around Cohasset. His family had a successful ice business which delivered giant blocks of ice to residents of the town. Perhaps the ice from Mealy's family business was added to glasses filled with the product fabled to have been generated by a member of the Williams family — Cohasset punch — a drink that has become somewhat famous in the town's history.

Williams is the son of Marshall and Edith Barrett Williams, and it has been said Marshall Williams is the creator of Cohasset punch. Legend says Marshall invented the drink, which although its exact recipe is unknown, is a cherry-colored, rum based liqueur. The punch was rumored to have been invented by Williams for a party at the estate of the late comedian

Planning board being televised

Planning board meetings are now held in the selectmen's meeting room to allow them to be broadcast on local cable access television. The board's next meeting is scheduled for July 27, and will begin at 6:30 p.m. For more information, please contact the planning board office at (781) 383-3517.

Town receives PWED extension

This May, selectmen requested an extension of the $1.5 million PWED grant (state Public Works Economic Development) which is being used to fund the downtown revitalization project. The town recently received word the extension has been approved and the funds will be available until June 30, 2006.

The project will make needed aesthetic improvements to the downtown streetscape. The grant was originally awarded in 2001 and was slated to expire May 30. Town Manager Bill Griffin requested the extension on behalf of the board and outlined a schedule for the project as well as the developments to date. The town was required to prove it needed the additional time for completion of the project, not planning.

The $1.8 million Village Revitalization project is being paid for through grants, not local property taxes. Streetscape improvements have been sidetracked over the years due to disagreement over how much and exactly what should be done to revitalize the village area. The project was put out to bid last winter, but only one company responded and the bid was too high.

Bylaw dispute ripples at Mill River Marine's Motif #1

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Construction on the Mill River Boatyard building "Motif 1" has been temporarily put on hold. However, developers may be given the go-ahead just long enough to keep the site from becoming a safety hazard.

The planning board has stopped construction on the Border Street site, at least temporarily, saying owners Cohasset residents Peter and Stephen Roy are in violation of a section of the town's zoning bylaws. The town's bylaws require site plan review approval for any effort to build, construct, reconstruct, or expand any buildings or structures which will be changed to exceed a total gross floor area of 200 square feet.

A site plan review was not conducted before construction began, and the board asked building inspector Bob Egan issue a cease and desist until a site plan is complete. Planning board chairman Al Moore said he contacted Town Counsel Rick Hucksam about the matter and received a response that indicated he agreed with the board — a site plan should have been conducted.

However, the Roys' attorney, Charles Humphreys said the building is only undergoing repairs. In a letter written to the planning board, Humphreys reiterated the town's bylaws give the planning board jurisdiction when construction, reconstruction, or expansion results in an increase of 200 square feet.

"Since there is no increase at all in the square footage of the building, no planning board jurisdiction exists."

— Charles Humphreys, the Roys' attorney

"Since there is no increase at all in the square footage of the building, no planning board jurisdiction exists," he wrote.

But board members feel it is obvious a reconstruction is taking place on the site; it rejected a site plan for reconstruction at the site once before. In the spring of 2004, Humphreys came before the planning board on behalf of another client, Mill River Boatyard LLC, led by local businessman Donald Staszko, who at that point planned to purchase the Mill River site from Peter Roy. Staszko had planned to rebuild the three buildings on the site virtually the same way they stood.

However, that May, the planning board voted 3-0 against approval of the site plan, stating it thought the applicant had not provided enough information regarding the site's intended use, along with a failure to meet the parking requirement set forth in the town's bylaw and a failure to meet public safety requirements. Due to its location on the water, the site has very specific criteria in terms of use.

The Mill River team appealed the planning board's decision, and claimed that by denying the site plan, which outlined plans for a full-service boatyard, complete with hauling, launching, storage and repair facilities, the planning board overstepped its jurisdiction. Mill River alleges the discretion exercised by the planning board in its decision is an "abuse of power and in excess of their authority in that a planning board does not have discretion in a site plan approval process."

Humphreys said the new set of plans submitted by the Roys were looked at by both Egan and the planning board prior to the start of construction. In a letter written to Egan he wrote, "Work is being done pursuant to a lawful building permit issued by you. To order a cease and desist upon the vote of the planning board, after you have issued the permit, results in a substantial interference with my client's rights, which will result in an immediate and substantial financial loss. Additionally, the issuance of a cease and desist order at this stage of construction creates and extremely dangerous and unstable condition, with respect to the partially completed work."

Humphreys said the planning board's vote to require a site plan review after construction has proceeded thus far, "is made more egregious by the fact that my clients, as part of their due diligence, presented their plans," both to the planning board and to Egan. Humphreys said after plans were reviewed, Egan sent him a letter which indicated he and the board agreed "the changes were minor alterations which required no planning board and zoning relief." Humphreys said his client relied on that judgment when it proceeded with the project.

However, the planning board maintains it never saw the plans.

"I'm very concerned they think the plan was approved when it wasn't," said Pratt.

In September when Egan issued the permit, he said he was told the work being done would stabilize the structure, and the floor and roof would be replaced as needed. He was told there would be no change of the existing profile, and he said he told the applicant, "This building has got to look the same as when you started."

"If they are reconstructing it the same way, we just want to look at it and make sure it's up to snuff," said Moore.

At the board's Wednesday meeting, it said to ensure the safety of the site, it would be willing to allow construction to go on until the building is secure. At that point, it would require the owners to come in for a full site plan review before construction goes any further.

Humphreys said he would speak to his clients and see what they will be willing to consider, but they feel strongly they are within their rights to follow through with their plans. He said he would get back to the board.

Health insurance option for elected officials

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

While town employees must work 20 hours per week to be eligible for health insurance, elected officials — who may only have one meeting per week or year — can qualify, provided they receive compensation for their time.

In addition, if an elected official serves more than 10 years on a board, he or she can become part of the Norfolk County Retirement System, which makes them eligible to receive health insurance for life.

The issue came up during a "benchmarking" conversation during Tuesday's board of selectmen's meeting, by selectman Gary Vanderweil. The board had been discussing how Cohasset's budget could be compared with other towns, based on what it offers town employees. A majority of the board did not know the benefit existed, and Vanderweil was looking for clarification of the rumors he had heard.

Director of Finance Michael Buckley said the only elected officials who are paid a "salary" and do not work set hours are the five selectmen, the three assessors, the town moderator, and the registrars. Each selectman receives $1,000 per year, with the chairman receiving $1,500. The chairman of the board of assessors receives $1,300 per year, while members receive $1,200. Registrars receive $329 per year, and the moderator is paid $1.

Buckley said currently there are two elected officials taking advantage of the program and both are on the board of assessors. Each pays the same health insurance bill as town employees, which is roughly $320 per month. Once an elected official has served 10 years on a board, Buckley said they may then opt to take advantage of the town's retirement benefits.

"They would keep the same HMO they currently have until they are 65," said Buckley, and after that point insurance would be provided by Medicare. The town pays 50 percent of Medicare insurance costs.

the last five or six years," he said, adding out-of-towners are less respectful of their property and less concerned with their needs.

"Any Saturday, Sunday, or holiday, or any day when the sun is shining," there are cars parked on the street, and he said typically, during the week, one side of the street will be full, but on the weekends, both sides become occupied which makes it difficult for residents to get in and out of their driveways.

Laurie Stanton, 1 Spindrift Lane, echoed Costello's sentiments, and said what worries her the most is safety. She said not only have cars been taking up both sides of the road, she has witnessed altercations on the street between individuals fighting for a spot, and the police have been called to respond. Stanton has three small children and said she wants them to be able to go outside and play and not worry about a fight breaking out.

Stanton also said it is important to note, it's not just people who are using the beach that are parking on the street, it is also contractors and landscapers who aren't even working in the neighborhood.

"We had painters parked for two weeks," she said, adding no one on Spindrift Lane was having work done.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said with the parking ban, Police Chief James Hussey said all cars will be subject to a fine, even those belonging to residents of the street. He asked residents whether they would be adversely impacted if they wanted to have landscapers or contractors working at their own homes.

The residents said they have room in their driveways to accommodate those vehicles.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said he is concerned the parking ban will deny people access to the beach. He said by the harbor, people park on the street "all day every day," and those who live there have gotten used to it.

But selectman Rob Spofford pointed out Spindrift Lane "is a private way. It's very different."

Sullivan said he doesn't see what is wrong with someone who lives on Forest Avenue parking on the street to go to the beach.

"It's really not Cohasset residents," said Stanton, adding on the rare occasion it is, it's usually teenagers with coolers.

Selectman Gary Vanderweil lives on Jerusalem Road near Spindrift Lane and he said he drives by regularly and sees cars parked on the street. However, he said he sees the beach as "a great natural resource" and worries about the precedent the board would set if parking is restricted.

Vanderweil said a no parking sign recently appeared on Jerusalem Road Drive where people used to park to go fishing on Moors Rocks. Now people have nowhere to park their cars near that area. "It seems we're depriving people," he said.

However, Spofford said Spindrift Lane is private, therefore residents have come to the board with a petition. "The only access they have (to enforcement) is to ask us to put the sign up," he said.

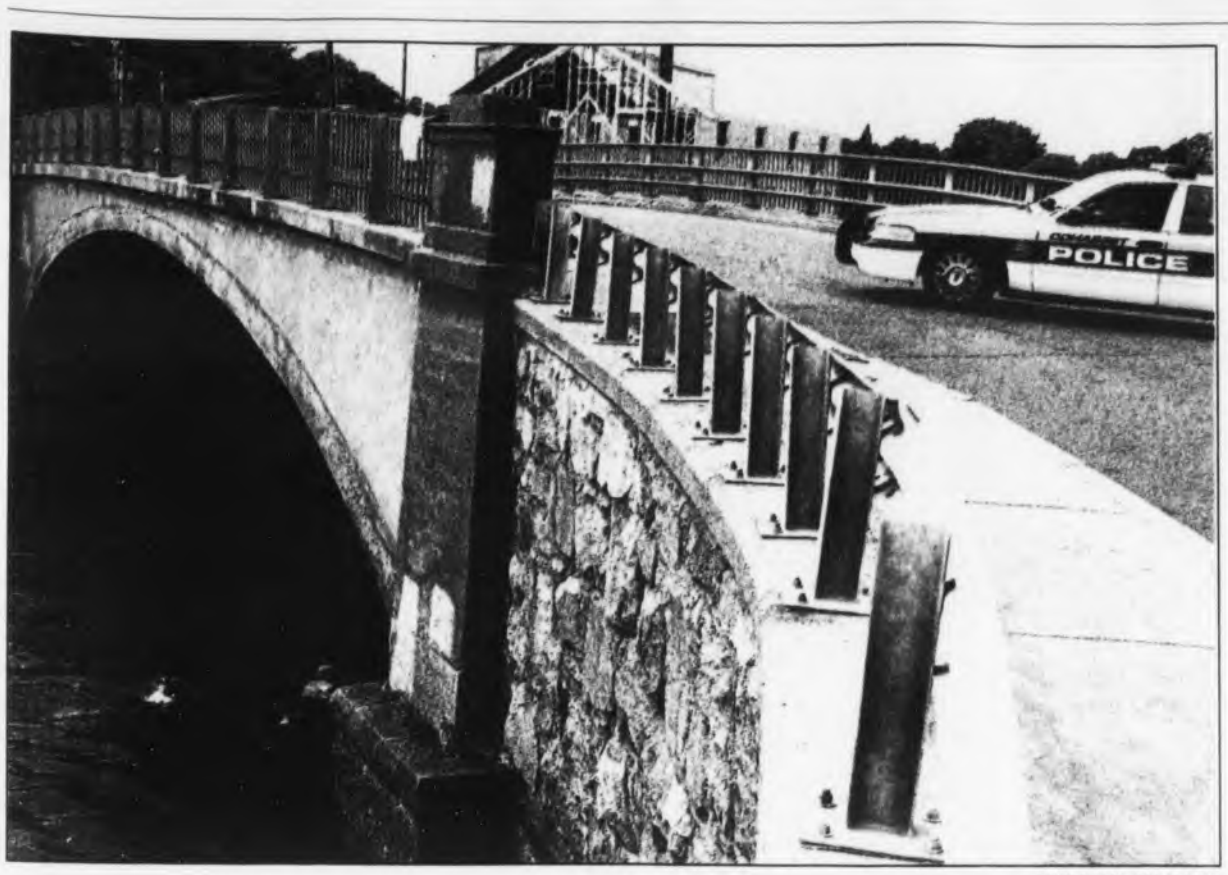
Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said in his opinion, the situation must be bad if the entire neighborhood is willing to give up parking in front of their own homes.

Koed, along with Dormitzer and Spofford, cast affirmative votes to install the new sign. Now anyone parking on Spindrift Lane could get a $25 ticket.

Towing floated

The parking situation on Spindrift Lane is a small piece of a much larger parking puzzle. Black Rock Beach and Sandy Beach each has its own set of problems. Town Manager Bill Griffin said he will be discussing long-term parking solutions with selectmen in the near future.

Sandy Beach has a large parking lot but only those who have purchased beach stickers can use it. That means out-of-town visitors cannot park there. However, some non-residents feel a $25 fine is worth paying for a nice day at the beach and will risk being issued a parking ticket. Split between five friends, $5 each isn't a bad deal, officials say.



Griffin said possible deterrents are increasing fines or towing illegally parked vehicles.

Residents on Spindrift Lane originally proposed installing a "no parking, tow zone" sign. But selectmen opted to stick with "no parking" which is the case on several other beach-side streets. (However, they said when the discussion of towing as a town-wide measure takes place, Spindrift Lane will be up for consideration).

There is no parking at Black Rock Beach so access is an issue. Former selectman Merle Brown, who was at Tuesday's meeting, suggested turning the alley across the street into a parking lot. Parking there could be regulated through town beach stickers, he said.

Griffin said he will speak with DPW superintendent Carl Sestito regarding whether opening the alley for parking is feasible. Griffin will also meet with Police Chief James Hussey regarding the issue of increasing fees or implementing towing for illegally parked cars.

Two boys swim under the Border Street bridge after a Cohasset police officer stopped by and warned them about jumping off.

Bridge jumping can be risky business

Police try to stop summer pastime

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

While jumping off the Mill River Bridge on a hot day is a cool activity for many young people, it's a big headache for the Cohasset Police Department.

Every summer as soon as the temperature rises, mainly teenagers – although some are older than that and many are from out-of-town – flock to Border Street to jump off the bridge into the rapids below.

Depending on the weather, the police log can contain numerous daily reports about police officers having "dispersed a gathering" from the bridge. But once the officer leaves, the jumpers often return.

Chief James Hussey said Cohasset police can't ignore the jumpers because it's a safety issue.

"We don't want to see anyone get hurt."
— Police Chief James Hussey

"Initially I thought it took place only at high tide with less of a chance they could hit the bottom," Hussey said. "But they're jumping anytime."

Hussey said he has parked near the bridge to observe the activity and noted after an officer leaves, the jumpers wait 5-to-10 minutes and return.

He said the officers are letting the jumpers know about the dangers.

"We don't want to see anyone get hurt," Hussey said. "We as a police department need to do everything we can to discourage that behavior."

Hussey, noting a town bylaw prohibits jumping from the bridge, said the special police officers, who are hired for the summer, are patrolling the harbor area including the bridge. The bylaw also prohibits jumping from Cunningham Bridge on Atlantic Avenue and Cat Dam on Nichols Road.

He said after being warned once, the jumper can be picked up and brought home where the officer speaks to the parents. He also said there has been at least one incident involving jumpers and alcohol which adds to the danger. That incident resulted in a juvenile arrest.

Hussey said seasonal police officers are helping patrol the bridge on the weekends. He said police are looking into the potential of levying civil fines similar to those for parking tickets for repeat jumpers.

Hussey says he understands the attraction bridge jumping has.

"Many of us remember doing it as kids," Hussey said. "But it's important to understand that we have to be worried that someone could get hurt.

"For that reason I'm not going to be sitting here saying we're not doing anything to discourage it."

Scituate resident plans to continue coastal initiatives

Takes over reins from Roy Herzfelder

By Jillian Fennimore
JFENNIMO@CNC.COM

It is a great honor, said Scituate resident Stephen Pritchard, that he was asked to become one of Gov. Mitt Romney's top aides, as the new Environmental Affairs Secretary.

Pritchard, who was sworn by the governor on Tuesday said he looks forward to the "breadth of opportunity" as he enters his new job.

"This will give me a much broader view of the environmental organization," he said. "I appreciate the faith that governor has put in me."

Pritchard, 47, has taken over the job from Cohasset resident Ellen Roy Herzfelder, who stepped down this week after 2-1/2 years in the position. Roy Herzfelder has accepted a position as Senior Policy Advisor to Romney.

"It was a very complex decision for me," Roy Herzfelder said. "I love this job."

Pritchard, who was named Acting Commissioner for the Department of Conservation and Recreation in February, will now oversee agencies such as the Department of Environmental Protection, Department of Fish and Game, Department of Agriculture, and Office of Coastal Zone Management. He will also be responsible for the state parks agency.

As for following Roy Herzfelder, Pritchard said he looks forward to continuing to build on her efforts related to coastal issues.

"I certainly plan to carry on some of the initiatives," he said about protecting the coastline and its beaches.

A resident of Scituate for 11 years, Pritchard said he believes his time on the South Shore has been to his advantage — especially for his new post.

"I love the town," he said. "It's where I chose to settle down and raise my family — wife, Karen and 15-year-old daughter, Kaitlin)."

"I appreciate the faith that governor has put in me."

— Stephen Pritchard, new Secretary of Environmental Affairs

It is still unknown who will be nominated by Romney to take his place with the DCR, but Pritchard said he will make his own recommendation for someone who will be able to manage the two agencies that make up the DCR park system— the Metropolitan District Commission and Department of Environmental Management.

"I am really appreciative for just how much tremendous parkland the Commonwealth owns," he said.

Prior to working with the DCR, Pritchard worked with Roy Herzfelder as the Chief Operating Officer/Chief of Staff for Environmental Affairs. He was also a vice president of operations at Intercontinental Energy Corporation, where he managed multiple energy production facilities.

Pritchard has a bachelor's degree in mechanical engineering from Northeastern University and a master's degree in business administration at Loyola College.

Environmental advocates have high praise for Pritchard and his management skills.

"We were encouraged by some of the progress Pritchard made even during his short tenure as acting commissioner of DCR," Massachusetts Sierra Club Director James McCaffrey said in a statement. "There appeared to be a fairly 'open-door policy' at DCR under Pritchard's watch."

STATE HOUSE PHOTO/ABBY BRACK

Stephen Pritchard is all smiles after his nomination for the state Secretary of Environmental Affairs post was announced last Thursday.

Local environmental activists were delighted to hear another South Shore resident was named to the state's top environmental post.

Samantha Woods, executive director of the North and South River Watershed Association (NSRWA), said Pritchard has the advantage in his environmental post since he will be "more familiar with this area."

Woods also said she hopes to see Pritchard tackle some of the environmental issues and coastal zone management including water supply, pollution and storm water concerns, and hopes he will work well with the NSRWA.

One concern she had was the constraints that he will have in terms of environmental funding, which has shown to be "significantly less" than past years.

"It's all a question of resources and how we allocate them," she said.

In addition to Pritchard, Romney nominated two additional candidates for cabinet posts —Thomas Trimarco of Charlestown as new secretary of administration and finance, and Timothy Murphy of North Anodover as secretary of health and human services.

Left-turn arrows aren't doing the job

southbound traffic is supposed to proceed through the intersection, followed by southbound traffic being granted a left-turn arrow onto Beechwood Street (in the direction of the village).

MassHighway installed the traffic signal, replacing the former signal without arrows, after a public outcry over the safety of the intersection. The most recent study (complied by the Boston Metropolitan Planning Organization) available at the time reported 29 accidents during a two-year period from 1997-1999. The results were well above the state average of accidents for a signalized intersection. More than 40 percent of the accidents at the intersection involved personal injury including one fatality.

The report stated: "Route 3A carries heavy traffic through volume in both directions; it is difficult for northbound and southbound left-turning traffic to find a gap. In some cases drivers may miscalculate acceptable gaps and in other times, out of frustration, drivers my try to force themselves through traffic."

Hussey said he has sat near the intersection to investigate and witnessed the problem, which was brought to his attention by his police officers. There was an accident at the intersection last week, but it's unclear if it was caused by the faulty lights, he said.

Hussey said in addition to having the lights operate correctly, he would also like to see dedicated left-turning lanes at the intersection in both directions.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said he has already spoken with a member of the neighborhood to ensure abutters are aware of the hearing date. Abutter Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Road, said she will attend the hearing, as will many others in the neighborhood. She said their feelings about offering the game are still the same.

"We don't want Keno in a residential area," she said, adding there are many families in the area with small children and gambling does not fit in with the neighborhood. In addition, she said the Greek Church is in the process of constructing a youth center across the street and the area will be abundant with children who do not need to be exposed to gambling.

In addition, Plante said the expansion at the restaurant, while beautiful, has caused "more traffic, more people, and more noise," and she believes Keno would further add to the traffic.

"He's doing a great business as a restauranteur," she said of DiNero's owner Frank Plotner, adding he should leave gambling out of his business endeavors.

At this Tuesday's board of selectmen's meeting, selectman Gary Vanderweil expressed feelings similar to Plante's and said while he will hear DiNero's out, "Cohasset is a family values kind of town, and I'm not sure this ties in with family values."

However, selectman Michael Sullivan said the town has already allowed Keno in town. The Cohasset Food Mart on Route 3A offers the game.

Keno, sanctioned by the lottery commission, is a game akin to Bingo. Players are given a sheet of numbers and asked to mark anywhere from one to 12 spots and can wager up to $20 on each sheet. The winning numbers are then displayed on the screen and prizes are given out based on the number of picks the player picked correctly. A new game is displayed on the Keno screen every five minutes.

The board has 21 days in which to discuss the matter and make a decision regarding whether it will allow the restaurant to offer Keno to its patrons.

"If you wish to object, that's the time," said Griffin.

Smith Place plans worry abutters

Traffic is chief concern

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The addition of the Greenbush line is not the only change afoot for Smith Place residents. Plans are in the works to raze the small building located at 2 Smith Place and build a roughly 9,000-square-foot structure in its place.

Site owner Richard Brown came before the planning board Wednesday with his engineering consultant Terry McGovern from Stenbeck and Taylor, Inc. The two outlined plans for the site which includes building an eight-bay structure which Brown would like to be occupied by local businesses owners who spend most of their days working on job sites, but need a home base.

The property, although zoned commercial, is very close to a residential neighborhood. With the train on its way, the Ripley Road entrance to Smith Place will close, meaning the only way to access the property is by way of Pleasant Street to Cushing Street. With the potential for eight tenants, all of which could have multiple employees working for their companies, abutters worry about an increase in traffic.

Plans are in the works to raze this structure at 2 Smith Place and build a roughly 9,000-square-foot commercial building in its place.

Chris Allen, 21 Pleasant St., said his major concern is that business owners will be operating out of the bays all day long and will be disruptive to the neighborhood. While Brown might intend to rent to tenants with specific businesses in mind, at the end of the day, renting the space will be a top priority, and that could mean a different type of tenant moves in.

Linda Keller, 2 Cushing Road, said she worries while Brown has the best intentions for the site, once it is built, the potential is always going to exist for the property to be sold and the next owner may not have the same concern Brown does.

"What can we do to prevent this huge change from going to hell in a hand basket?" she asked.

Brown said he already has a few plumbers and electricians who are interested in renting space and they may be interested in renting more than one bay which could further reduce possible tenants. He also said he will be on site at least once a week to ensure there are no problems.

McGovern said he sees the tenants as arriving in the morning, leaving to go to job sites throughout the day, potentially stopping by during lunch time, and leaving in the evening. He doesn't believe there will be many trips in and out during the day.

"There won't be a constant flow of traffic like a retail shop or any other allowed use would have," he said.

Planning board chairman Al Moore noted that while having a business so close to a residential area is always going to pose some problems, when a site isn't being used, it can be just as detrimental to a neighborhood. Without someone maintaining a property, buildings fall into disrepair and become an eyesore, and it could be seen as a benefit to the neighborhood have the area spruced up, he said.

McGovern pointed out when the building is built, it will provide a buffer for residents from the train, which would be a positive. At its tallest point, the building will be 20 feet high.

But Keller said the potential for traffic greatly increasing on the site worries her, as there are 19 parking spaces drawn on plans for the site.

"Right now two cars have trouble passing," on Smith Place, she said. "Is there a way to not have (the traffic) run through a residential neighborhood?"

"Stop the train," Brown quipped.

Moore said considering the proposed use for the site, as long as the space exists in reserve for additional parking spaces, a lesser amount could be included on the plans. Grass could be planted instead of asphalt and if more spaces are needed, the grass would be torn up, creating more parking.

With the potential for eight tenants, all of which could have multiple employees working for their companies, abutters worry about an increase in traffic.

The planning board said it would like to see a more comprehensive landscape plan for the site. McGovern said they have plans to keep a Japanese maple that currently stands in front of the building, as well as some larger oak trees on the property. Due to the proximity of residences, there could be evergreens planted on site as part of the finalized plan.

In addition, lighting is also a concern for the board and abutters. Brown said there will be lights over each access door and one hooded light on each end of the building. He said there will be no parking lighting which could spill over to neighbors.

"We plan to use the minimal amount of lighting necessary," he said, adding everyone will be responsible for shutting the lights off in their individual bays at night, and the outside lights can be put on a timer to turn off at 7 p.m. or 8 p.m.

The board will take up the matter again at its next meeting, scheduled for Wednesday, July 27. Planning board meetings are now televised and can be accessed on the local cable channel. For more information, please call the planning board office at (781) 383-3517.

LOSE 12-30 LBS OF BODY FAT IN 12 WEEKS OR LESS!

Amy Davies

I have always been fairly fit and strong and I have always wondered what it would be like to really go to the next level. How do people feel when they are really fit?
I received a voucher from Fitness Together and considered the offer. I am very busy with 2 companies, 2 kids, a traveling husband and a million other distractions. Time is ALWAYS in short supply. FT offered close proximity to my house, a time that was convenient for me, and a really efficient workout.
I still go 3 times a week, and always look forward to it. I see plenty of friends there and the atmosphere is great. The session is private, focused and all about me and my goals. It takes no mental effort on my part, and the best thing for me is that it is an appointment, so I have to show up. I am not dieting or trying to lose weight. I love the way I look in the mirror, and I feel really strong and fit. It has been a fantastic investment for me, and I love having FT as part of my life.

After a period of relative quiet (not counting tsunamis and hurricanes), the world was once again badly shaken last week with the news that terrorists had struck in London, killing at least 50 and injuring hundreds of commuters on a double decker bus and three subway train stations.

Overnight, London went from the joy of being named the Olympic host in 2012, to the depths of despair over the terrorist attack. Immediately, cities in the Northeast issued a heightened security alert amidst concerns that the London attack might be part of a larger terrorist plot that would unfold here. An unsettling feeling of inevitably set in. England remains on heightened alert. It all feels so familiar.

All of this comes at a time when people are on the move, taking summer vacations to far off places, enjoying family reunions, visiting tourist spots and just generally heading off to see the world. Before we set out, we try to take the usual precautions — letting loved ones know of our destination and where we can be reached at all times. Then there's the old standby — American Express Traveler's Checks — don't leave home without them. We rely on credit cards, not cash, which can make us easy targets. How quaint, almost.

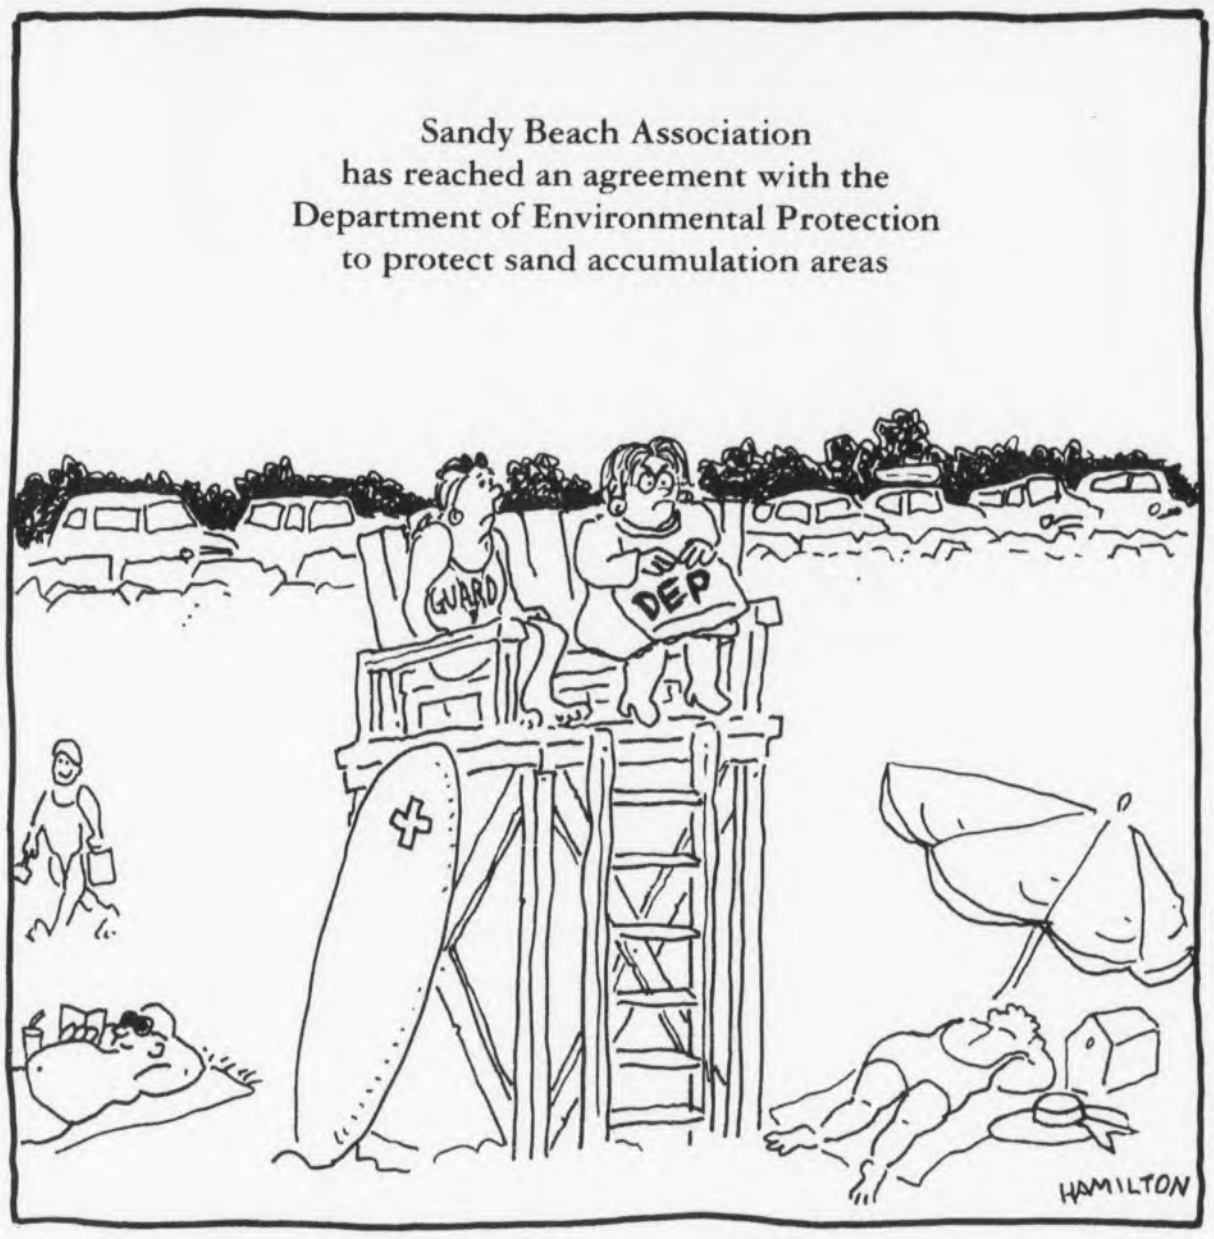
As a result of Sept. 11, we now go into an even more precautionary mode when we travel. Public awareness is the first and best line of defense against terrorism.

We make sure we travel with up-to-date government issued identification, with a photo. We get to airports a couple of hours early, because we know there could be security related delays. We travel lighter, mindful of what we pack. We take the measure of the person standing or sitting next to us. We keep our cell phone handy. It was the people with cell phones on the planes on Sept. 11 that alerted the world to what was going on. We take note of the bomb sniffing dogs at terminals, the officers with weapons. We refrain from saying or doing anything that could be taken the wrong way.

We are all warriors in this age of terror as this is the new reality of the post-Sept. 11 world. We thought we had gotten used to it, but after seeing the horrific carnage in London, we know we have not.

The terrorist bombings in London on July 7 brought us back to those shocking, terror-filled days (really, weeks and months) after 9/11. The London attack has already earned an infamy of its own — 7/7. Our hearts go out to the British people who are now experiencing the anguish we experienced on Sept. 11 and that the people of Spain know from the terrorist attack on a commuter train in Madrid in March 2004. That attack brought about a change of government.

How are we to go on with our lives knowing that terrorism will be with us for the foreseeable future? Clearly, these terrorists (whether al Qaeda or some other group with political motives), are not going to give up. But it helps if we remember the resolve Americans gathered in the days after Sept. 11.



We got back on the airlines, continued with our lives, reassessed our purpose and direction individually and as a nation, and took it on the chin. We got up, dusted ourselves off and developed the strength to persevere, knowing that the world and our role in it had changed forever. No terrorists boarding airplanes or sending anthrax in the mail could defeat us.

We fought back. It took us a while to recover, but recover we did. We toughened up. We tightened up our domestic security, public safety and law enforcement agencies. We have debated how much of our personal freedom we are willing to relinquish — a healthy and necessary debate in our democracy in this post-Sept. 11 world. We have made many necessary changes that have made us safer overall, especially in the area of airline security. More needs to be done to make mass transit safer.

We now know that there are people out there who mean us harm and who are diabolical in their determination to carry out their evil. We are not naïve.

And so as we go about our lives, working and traveling, we will be more vigilant, knowing the enemy is still out there. As we board airplanes, trains, buses and subways, we will be more watchful of our surroundings as the experts are urging us to do. We will look out for suspicious bags left unattended. We will care more about our personal safety and that of our neighbors. We will keep our guard up.

Almost four years later, we have been shocked back into our Sept. 11 mindset — but with the knowledge that the terrorists didn't win then and they won't get the better of us now.

LIFE'S A BEACH

ROBIN LAWRENCE

Sandy Beach is a private developed barrier beach, owned and managed by the Sandy Beach Association (SBA) as set forth in a trust established in 1917 for the recreational use by Cohasset residents.

The Town of Cohasset owns the beach parking lot and works collaboratively with the SBA to meet the parking needs of beachgoers.

The SBA and Town resolved beach management and parking lot maintenance issues that are of concern to the state Department of Environmental Protection. An agreement established height and width parameters for sand accumulation areas:

- Seaward of the beach rock wall [width of 20 feet from the rock wall at the bathhouse end tapering to 6 feet at the Nichols Road end; height of the rock wall]
- Along the parking lot border with Atlantic Avenue [width of 3 feet from the posts into the parking lot to 7 feet from the posts to the edge of the macadam; height of 3 feet].

Sandy Beach is open for the summer. Life guards will be on duty 9 a.m. – 7 p.m. daily through Labor Day (Sept. 5). Bathhouse facilities are available for use during the same hours. The following rules are issued to assure the safety of beach visitors and to protect the environment:

Prohibited:

- Alcoholic beverages
- Dogs between 8:30 a.m. and sunset
- Flotation devices
- Glass containers
- Open fires
- Rock climbing
- Walking on dunes
- Water craft in marked swim area
- Fishing
- Launching boats, canoes, kayaks
- Scuba diving
- Allowed – only in orange cone marked area:
- Frisbees
- Hard balls
- Kites
- "Skimmers"

Beach visitors are invited to enjoy many days at the "Jewel of Cohasset" in a safe and environment-friendly manner.

Robin Lawrence is president of the Sandy Beach Association.

'Train is now a visible reality'

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Since we last wrote in these pages, many changes have become very apparent. All trees have been removed from the right of way north of Beechwood Street and most of the right of way has been totally cleared. The train is now truly a visible reality. Final clearing is now underway near the Hingham line at Woodside Cemetery. Silt fencing is being added to the right of way as soon as the clearing is completed. The silt fence, as its name implies, is a water permeable fence with a wire backing that is designed to keep all silt that may be washed off of the right of way by rain from entering the surrounding lands.

Clearing will start shortly from Beechwood Street to the Scituate line. This area has been on an environmental hold until after July first due to wetlands and the critters who live there.

Construction of in-the-ground items has begun. This can most easily be seen at the foot of Pond Street as a drainage culvert is replaced between the two sections of Spring Street. This culvert carries the outflow from Ellms Meadow as it winds its way to Jacob's Meadow (behind downtown) and then to the harbor outfall at the VFW. The Ellms Meadow outflow is controlled by an adjustable gate. In the summer all of the water is allowed to flow through to the harbor, but in the winter the outflow is partially dammed, holding water to form the skating pond.

Other culverts will be under construction in the area south of Spring Street. Most of these construction areas will not be visible from the streets. Only direct abutters will be aware that these areas are under construction.

Between the two sections of Spring Street, precast concrete retaining walls are being set into place to form the boundary between the train bed and the surrounding wetlands. This is a novel construction technique that permits much faster construction with less disturbance than built-in-place retaining walls.

During the latter part of July and August construction will start on the footings for the Rocky Lane bridge. We are apt to see heavy earth moving and digging equipment followed by material deliveries. Please drive carefully and be aware of the potential hazards when driving on this section of North Main Street.

As we have mentioned before, please be careful and caution your children to stay away from all construction areas. As inviting as they may be, they are extremely dangerous to all. This is all private property and not the serene area that it once was.

HEALTH NOTES

Pedestrian access to the train station

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Sometimes Health Notes waxes eloquent over many things, but there are only a few issues that we consider fundamental and really important. Usually they are at the bottom of most people's list of important issues. But generally they are the things you learned at your mother's knee, or should have. Wash your hands, eat properly, and always get enough exercise; also look both ways (in other words, think before you get carried away). It's funny, with the information dump we get during our formative years how many of the fundamentals we set aside.

Nourishment may not taste best, and so we overlook it; we're late and we just don't wash and therefore get a virus or a cold. And with cars, who walks? Well, about 20 percent of us do. The rest of us don't — at least not enough. So when the Board of Health finds a public agency deliberately omitting the opportunity to walk, we feel something should be done.

Of course, we're talking about the MBTA, which has deliberately omitted planning for pedestrian access to the proposed Cohasset station. Fortunately, our dialog about the subject has borne fruit. According to the MBTA, we can have pedestrian access if we pay for it.

Having spent much of the money we were to receive in mitigation of negative effects of the MBTA land-taking, like arranging for sufficient parking space and replicating wetlands etc., we have precious little money to accomplish things which might really mitigate the train's effects; such as providing a way to walk or bike to the station. However, thanks to good planning by some of the Town Boards, we are going to have pedestrian access to the 'T' Station by way of 3A and King Street.

In late 2004, Alta Planning and Design submitted a draft final report to the Cohasset Board of Health for the design of a pedestrian access plan along part of the MBTA right of way.

The health board was unable to find much interest in such a plan until planning board member Peter Pratt, who is the Town's Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC) representative, brought up the fact there was going to be no pedestrian access to the Cohasset station and there was a current plan for a walking trail with a pedestrian pathway adjacent to at least some parts of the MBTA right of way all the way out to Greenbush.

Two factors tend to make a compelling argument to the MBTA for the current plan for pedestrian trail in Cohasset:

- The fact that Cohasset may pay for a substantial part of the trail,
- and the fact that the MBTA will build a pedestrian path into Wompatuck Park as a quid pro quo for the State Dept. of Conservation and Recreation Dept. which controls part of the right of way which the MBTA needs to finish the Red Line extension.

This impetus, coupled with the fact that the State has not spent millions of Federal dollars earmarked for pedestrian enhancements by the EPA, provides the initiative which Peter Pratt hopes to convert into action.

It is up to the town as a whole to support these initiatives which will begin appearing at selectmen's meetings and planning board sessions in the near future. Also, at Tuesday's Selectmen's meeting, Fred Koed was appointed to be the new MAPC representative for the selectmen. This speaks well for the possibility of coordination between Town departments in an initiative which should make the Town a more pedestrian friendly place.

Increased bike-pedestrian access to Greenbush stations also helps us push the important and publicly popular agenda of trying to secure traffic signals on Route 3A.

And so, as the political process wends its way through the pathways of Federal, State and Town government, we all wait breathlessly for the outcome. Hopefully, many of us will be able to walk to the new MBTA station.

Defense of finances doesn't make the grade

COMMENTARY

WIG PIERSON

Ms. Jerz's remarkable defense of the school system finances in last week's Mariner raised a number of issues that deserve attention and further discussion.

Most notable is Ms. Jerz's own description of her credentials as a past leader of the school community, while at the same time describing the school's record as an "Inherited mess" in which the "previous administration did not have a good handle on the budget in general". While her oversight of this previous administration does not disqualify Ms. Jerz from commenting, it certainly raises questions of credibility and motivation.

In the event that readers of this response were unable to read all of Ms. Jerz's comments, the following are quotes from last week's piece to summarize her main points and then offer a more financially responsible point of view.

"...of the four teaching positions in question, two were not in last year's budget... and the other two positions were proposed". The point is simply that the suggested budget cuts reduce the teaching staff in preference to reducing overhead costs. The convoluted explanations only obfuscate this fact.

"...members of the School Committee have suggested that they (teachers) be funded by cutting discretionary spending, accepting private funding, and/or by instituting user fees...". The principle at work here is the transfer of taxpayer funds from discretionary spending into classroom spending. Taxpayers are appalled that tax dollars are continually diverted from our children's classrooms to pay for various administrative overhead items.

"(these actions) ...represent an attempt at the much broader agenda of privatization of our public schools". Ms. Jerz is incorrect. The broad agenda is to redefine the taxpayer-funded public schools as centers of education and privatize the discretionary spending. Discretionary spending is a private matter and the taxpayers should not be burdened with this.

"...user fees are in this situation a hidden tax on parents." This too, is obviously incorrect. Fees are in no way hidden, they are the most visible form of payment. The fact is that the discretionary expenditures are currently being hidden since they are buried in the education budget, which has been historically indecipherable.

Taxpayers are appalled that tax dollars are continually diverted from our children's classrooms to pay for various administrative overhead items.

"...punish parents for not voting for the override or build a case for another override...". While denying the truth of this observation, Ms. Jerz gave no satisfactory explanation for the preference to reduce the academic staff. Surely someone can explain why a smaller teaching staff is the suggested option.

"Private funding is not the road to quality at all, but is more likely the road to inequality within our school system." Ms. Jerz fails to explain her position, which contends that more private funding of schools diminishes quality. The inequality in discretionary items is a matter of choice and we should have choice. There has been no suggestion of inequality in the classroom, as could be inferred from this quote.

"Teachers cannot teach without supplies, materials, and textbooks. Teachers cannot teach if there are not enough support staff and programs to provide for the needs of special education students. Teachers cannot teach if students come to school hungry and have not had breakfast or cannot afford lunch. Teachers cannot teach without adequate professional development opportunities." While it is clear that teachers need and should have all the materials they need, it is also important to have teachers. The tradeoff is not books for teachers, its discretionary spending versus teachers. It is the administration that suggested cutting teaching supplies when asked to spare the teachers. Furthermore, do we really want teachers that cannot teach without support staff?

"It is the School Committee's responsibility to be an advocate for public education as a whole." This is, arguably, the most revealing statement in the entire commentary. The statement is entirely wrong. The School Committee is not there to advocate for the schools, it is elected to act in the best interest of all the citizens of Cohasset. It is the School Committee's fiduciary responsibility to ensure that taxpayer dollars are prudently used for their intended purpose, to educate children.

The views articulated by Ms. Jerz are in conflict with this fiduciary responsibility and have produced the lopsided budgets that sacrifice teachers for what most taxpayers would agree are non-essentials in the school overhead. Let us support the children of our community and the teachers that are so critical to their success.

It is clear that neither the present superintendent, the previous superintendent, nor most of the school committee during the last 10 years have had the slightest interest or concern for the taxpayers of Cohasset.

Their philosophical view stated in private conversations has always been, "if you can't afford to pay higher and higher taxes to support the limitless appetite for more money for the schools, then move the hell out of town."

The scare tactics of the PSO, superintendents, and several school committees have been extraordinarily successful in intimidating the voting majority in town.

Perhaps the end of their successful intimidation has finally arrived and we can rededicate ourselves, as a community, to energetically find ways to live within a balanced budget for both the town and the school side without resorting to yearly overrides.

Let us begin!

Private funding for schools nothing new

COMMENTARY

LEE JENKINS

In your last edition, Maureen Jerz, former PSO, School Council, School Committee, Advisory Board Chair and member of School Investigative Committee, took people to task for wanting to "save" teachers.

In her explanations Ms. Jerz left out several important facts — the primary one being that at the cost of cutting teachers, the override proponents backed a brand new $70K administrative position: a fifth principal, who at 25 years old has virtually no experience. Keep in mind that the override proponents wanted to eliminate at least four teaching positions – they needed at all costs to maintain their credibility.

She neglected to even mention points for or against part-time vs. full-time business manager and curriculum coordinator. For our size of district and especially with the new coordination with the Town CFO, the state recommendations are for part time positions for business manager and curriculum coordinator. If savings could be found here — more money could be directed to the classroom.

The question of private funding is not new and it is frankly disingenuous for Ms. Jerz to suddenly be opposed to private funding; so many school committee candidates, present and former members, ran on a private funding platform. The Cohasset Education Foundation was formed to bring private funds into the school. Even the PSO is involved in private fund raising. I agree with Ms. Jerz that Barbara Buckley's plan last year to privately fund two teachers was a mistake.

Citizens should not have had to come to the forefront to fund these two teacher positions. Instead, the school committee, the advisory board and PSO should have been doing their jobs – namely managing the schools. As Dr. Slanetz has demonstrated at recent meetings, there is money available for teachers if we reorganize and change some methods of doing business.

For years I have been requesting our elected officials to have fee-for-service programs as lunch and daycare – KEDS - pay their way. In 2002 we had to put $32K of taxpayer dollars towards a lunch deficit and the KEDS program has never covered their actual costs. These non-education programs are taking money directly out of the classroom be it teachers, supplies or textbooks and our elected and appointed officials have not cared.

I applaud school committeeman Alfred Slanetz for attempting to come up with solutions to live within educational budgets, bring accountability, keep teachers and dollars in the classroom, and maintain a livable tax rate for the residents of Cohasset.

The purveyors of doom and gloom who are wringing their hands at the increase (1-1/2 percent) in student population have not told the public that even when the school population was decreasing the school budget always increased and at a rate higher than the town side. (Please note that the K class has decreased by 30-plus students for the new school year.) Even when we didn't have to pay for new school equipment and maintenance during the years of the construction of the turnkey new buildings – the budget went up and according to the powers in charge there was no money for textbooks, supplies, teachers, art, music, sports.

There are no effective policies to address the continual problems of theft, vandalism or even the cheating. Goodness knows which line items the continuous stream of money came from in their cover ups over the last decades to pay for the replacement of the stolen and willful destruction of school property.

How can I say this? Just consider the post prom last year and the recent vandalism over two consecutive weekends. It was months before the town was aware of the post-prom damage and no one would have known about the first weekend of vandalism if the second did not take place. These have not been isolated incidences over the years but regular occurrences. Apparently the promise of a new sense of school pride with the $52 million taxpayer expenditure has not materialized.

We do have a new Memorandum of Understanding with the police department but it has the following caveat: this MOU addresses the reporting by school officials of reportable acts which they determine rise to the level of requiring police involvement. This sentence gives the school proponents the right to conceal the destructive activities that are happening on the campus which taxpayers unknowingly pay to correct.

My question is: where has all the money gone? Unfortunately because of the lack of oversight and the unwillingness to manage the superintendent and school administration exhibited by so many school committees and proponents, we will never know.

Thank goodness we currently have two school committee members, Chair Jamie Williams and Vice-Chair Dr. Slanetz who are willing to make the tough decisions that the office demands. The other board members and the old guard of the PSO should wake up and realize that they aren't doing the students any favor by demonizing their neighbors and perpetrating obstructionism to viable solutions to our problems.

Jimmy Doyle's drug store

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth we used to get our prescriptions filled at Jimmy Doyle's drug store around the corner from the Weymouth Theater in the Landing. He'd also mix you a coke if he had the time.

I knew Jimmy personally because he married Jean Drummey, the sister of Chris Drummey, who was in my class at school. It's the way things were done in those days. Every purchase was a chance to shoot whatever it was we shot with a friend.

Now, I get my prescriptions filled at the CVS pharmacy around the corner from nothing in particular, and if I have been in the store myself in the past year or two it was to buy a newspaper or a bottle of tonic. All else is done at the drive-up window.

I haven't seen a pharmacist at that store for a couple of years either although I'm sure there's one in there because the girls who man the window always have a little brown bottle ready to shove at me as long as I can shove the money back.

I understand that CVS is having a few PR problems over errors in putting up prescriptions and I hasten to say I've never had any trouble but if I did I wouldn't know what to complain to because the complaint department seems to be in Woonsocket, R.I.

I thought about Jimmy Doyle the other day when I was reading that CVS is opening one of those big box stores in Holbrook across the street from the big box store opened by Walgreens a couple of years ago. Both will have drive-up windows I am sure.

"How many drug stores do you need?" Mike Pelrine, a Holbrook resident, is quoted as asking. As many as we can get, is Holbrook's answer, noting that the new CVS will bring in $35,000 in new tax revenues. That'll pay for most of a new school teacher.

Did anyone notice that the decision by the Supreme Court in the New London eminent domain case might ...oh, no, it couldn't.

At the same time Jimmy was measuring scripts in his drug store, Helen Kelley's dad was making doughnuts and selling them from his shop at the other end of the Landing, around the corner from the Congregational Church.

Helen was in my class in school, too, and I used to get a free doughnut hole from her dad every now and then. They call them "munchkins" today and Dunkin' Donuts sells them by the dozen from shops all of which appear to have been built from the same set of plans.

But they haven't yet duplicated the aromas that came from Mr. Kelley's shop and are still recalled by a small and not so small boy who couldn't pass by without pausing to test the air.

You don't find many shops like that anymore but you find Dunkin' Donuts shops everywhere you look. There's even one in the Quincy Medical Center which makes me wonder if they have a nutritionist on the staff and where she got her diploma.

Cedarmere tweaks its plans

Considers feedback from future residents

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Before the summer's end, the Cedarmere senior housing project will be a proposal no more. Site preparation, such as placing hay bales and marking trees for clearing, begins this week.

Developers from Leggat McCall Properties, the company developing the 41-acre Hayes Estate located off Beechwood Street, will hold a meeting at 6 p.m. Wednesday, July 20, in the Manor House — the main building on the property — to discuss how development will proceed. The meeting will be posted by the planning board and will therefore be public, but the company plans to notify abutters.

Bill Gause and Jim Smalanskas of Leggat McCall attended Wednesday's planning board meeting. Both stressed while there will be activity on the site, that does not mean construction has begun. Gause said workers will place bales of hay around the site to serve as runoff barriers and there will be backhoes on the property completing work related to the planned on-site septic system.

They stressed only with final approval from the planning board can any construction begin.

When the final plans are submitted, they will be slightly different from the plans approved by the board for the previous Cedarmere development team, which included Cohasset residents David and Kelli Calhoun and their business partner Tom Ragno of Lexington. Leggat McCall submitted few changes that received preliminary planning board approval Wednesday.

Smalanskas said after speaking with seniors interested in living at Cedarmere, and going over plans with the company's architects, they decided with some minor "tweaking" the project could be further improved. Changes include new road configurations, small alterations to building orientation, and some new landscaping plans for portions of the site.

Some roads have been reconfigured to provide better access to buildings and preserve open space. The road approaching the Manor House will now wind around to the back of the building to allow for more visitor parking and less stairs for seniors to climb. In addition, when driving up the Beechwood Street entrance to the property, the absence of that road will maximize greenspace.

"It will feel much more like a grand inn," Smalanskas said, with the drive-up entrance at the back. In addition, Gause said the large green area will, "mimic the Common."

In other areas of the property, drives were reconfigured to eliminate the need for blasting and provide privacy for residents.

Some units had been proposed as duplexes, but after speaking with potential residents, the company has found many would prefer to live in separate dwellings. As a result, a number of those buildings will now be detached.

There is a tennis court currently on the plans which may or may not remain. Amenities such as tennis courts and pools are sometimes not as popular with seniors, and Leggat McCall is leaving the option open, depending on what residents say they want.

"The general feedback we've received is, 'A pool is good, but I'll never use it,'" said Smalanskas, which is why there is no pool on the site plans. However, there will be a fitness center with simple machinery.

Planning board member Peter Pratt cautioned if a tennis court does make it on the final set of plans, because lighting has already been thoroughly discussed and agreed on by abutters, he would prefer to see it unlit.

Gause said if there is a tennis court in the final plans, he imagines it would only be used during the summer months when the days are longer, which would take away the need for lighting.

Perhaps one of the most significant changes, at least for Gause, is the renaming of "Crossing Lane," one of the roads within the Cedarmere development, to "Cotton Lane," in honor of his grandfather, King Street resident Daniel Cotton.

Representatives from Leggat McCall will hold a public meeting with the planning board Wednesday, July 20 at 6 p.m. at the Cedarmere site - located off Beechwood Street and formerly known as the Hayes Estate. The meeting will take place in the Manor House, which is the large, central building at the site. For more information, please call the planning board office at (781) 383-3517.

Cook bids expected at the last minute

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The deadline to receive bids on the Cook Estate project is today (Friday); the documents were slated to be opened at 10 a.m.

At the time the Mariner went to press Thursday, the town had not received any bids but Town Manager Bill Griffin said he expected at least two would come in.

How selectmen will proceed in the selection process will depend on the number of bids. They plan to begin interviewing potential developers in roughly two weeks.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said 12 companies received a copy of the Request for Proposals for the project that dictates what the town would like to see built on the site. Northland Residential, the company the town had been working with on the project, had indicated it would submit a second bid.

Griffin said he was not worried about the lack of submissions. "Companies usually do not submit their proposals until the last day or so," he said in an interview last week.

While during the first bid process the board had the benefit of receiving a recommendation from an RFP advisory committee made up of citizens, time is of the essence and therefore, that same process may not be feasible.

Tuesday, the board floated the idea of soliciting residents with professional experience to help review proposals and including the former RFP committee in the discussions to help sort through the town's options.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said he would like to bring in experts especially in the areas of architecture and energy. Selectman Gary Vanderweil said he would like to see a design review and would also like to have someone, potentially Dan Coughlin of Tutela Engineering Associates, one of the town's contracted engineers, to take a look at the wastewater plans.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said while expertise would be good, the people who participated in the RFP selection process will provide valuable information as they sorted through the first round of bids and weighed the various merits of each proposal. He said they will be able to compare the new projects with the feel of the first, including whether it seems like a real community.

Dormitzer said he would also like to include a resident from the senior communities of 100 Pond Street and Wheelwright Farm at the meetings. Selectmen Rob Spofford said he thinks it would also help if members of both the planning board and the zoning board are at the meetings as well.

"Companies usually do not submit their proposals until the last day or so."
— Town Manager Bill Griffin

Vanderweil suggested hiring outside experts to help with the process. However, Spofford said there are many talented individuals in town who could step forward to help in the selection process for free.

However, Dormitzer agreed with Vanderweil and said with a project of this scope, "I'd go with the best person I could whether it means spending or not," adding he doesn't want the town to be "penny wise and pound foolish." However, Spofford reminded the board hiring an outside contractor would require another bid process to comply with state procurement laws and the town simply doesn't have the time.

Advertising for the new RFP began June 15, and prospective developers have had 30 days in which to make an offer. Griffin said all five companies which submitted bids the first time —Deer Hill Partners LLC, Cohasset Residential LLC, Abbot Real Estate Development LLC, Baran-Keen, and Northland Residential — were sent copies to ensure a fair bid process.

The new RFP has a different set of guidelines in place, which includes a new minimum bid price of $4.9 million The number of units has been reduced from a maximum of 95 to a maximum of 65 and the town-owned land has been removed from the transaction. The town owns an 8.7 acre parcel behind Stop & Shop that abuts the Cook property, which during the first round was going to be marketed with the Cook land and sold together to allow the town to make a profit.

While the town-owned land was included in the first RFP, based on the requirement that it would be deeded back to the town as open space, the selectmen voted to leave it out of the new transaction. An easement to access the property will therefore be required in the new RFP.

Now, instead of looking to make a profit, the town is more interested in making up the money it has spent. The price tag will not change for the Cook property - which includes 18.92 acres off Sohier Street across from Fairoaks Lane, and roughly 3 acres on the other side of Sohier Street between the Fairoaks neighborhood and the Mobil station on Route 3A. The town will pay $4.5 million for both parcels.

With a minimum bid price of $4.9 million, the town will be assured it can at least makes $400,000, which will be enough to cover the $250,000 spent in legal fees, engineering costs, and appraisals for the project so far, and provide a small cushion.

In the event the town does not receive any bids it deems satisfactory, the town will have a big decision to make. There is a Sept. 15 deadline with the heirs of the Cook Estate, and after that time any extensions will cost the town $20,000 per month. If in the end the town purchases the property, the monthly fees will go toward the purchase price of the land. If the deal falls through, the town will not make up any of the money spent on extensions.

Residents with expertise in any area of development are encouraged to contact the selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105, or send a letter of interest to Town Hall at 41 Highland Ave.

William H. Crane.

But it wasn't just Williams' father who was well know, his mother was the daughter of the well known Shakespearean actor of his time, Lawrence Barrett.

Growing up, Mealy lived at 39 Beechwood St., a large Victorian home which has since been converted into condominiums. Williams lived close by, just up the road at 266 South Main St. The sacrifice both men made has been remembered with a memorial square, both of which are located at intersections on South Main Street. A memorial for Mealy is at the intersection of South Main and Elm streets and a memorial for Williams is at the intersection of South Main and Summer streets. Because Mealy was the first Cohasset man killed during World War I, as an additional tribute, the American Legion Post was named the George H. Mealy Post #118.

But paying tribute in Cohasset wasn't enough for some fellow residents.

In September 1931, then Cohasset American Legion Post Commander Nathaniel Hurwitz, along with Joseph Barrow, Frank Migliaccio and the Pond Plain Band of Weymouth went to France to visit the soldiers' grave sites and pay their respects. The group placed wreaths and Cohasset earth over the graves of both young men.

In total, five Cohasset men were killed during World War I. The summer of 1918 saw the deaths of not only Mealy and Williams, but Pvt. John W. Sidney, who was killed Aug. 17, 1918, exactly one month after Mealy's death. Both Joseph Gonsalves and Herman Daley were killed in October of that same year, on the 6th and 14th, respectively.

Chairman of the Veterans Memorial Committee Glenn Pratt provided the Mariner with the information for this article. For more information on George Mealy, Lawrence Williams, or any of the Cohasset veterans who have paid the ultimate price in the name of freedom, please visit the Cohasset Veterans Memorial Committee Web site at www.cohassetveteransmemorial.com.

Squares named after fallen servicemen

Sgt. George H. Mealy and Cpl. Lawrence B. Williams are two of many veterans who have been honored for their military service by the town of Cohasset. The town lost three other men during World War I, who have all been memorialized with squares in town including:

- Pvt. Herman E. Daley: corner of Jerusalem Road and North Main Street.
- Pvt. John W. Sidney: the park at the intersection of Elm Street and Margin Street at the Cove.
- Pvt. Joseph A. Gonsalves: intersection of Beechwood Street and Doane Street at Beechwood Corner.

The mothers of the five servicemen that gave their lives during World War I are memorialized at the Gold Star Mothers Monument at Woodside Cemetery.

Roughly 250 men and women from Cohasset served during "The Great War" from 1914 until the war was declared over on November 11, 1918. Cohasset has memorialized all of its service men and women who fought during World War I by listing all of their names at Veterans Park at Cohasset Harbor.

Towns to share ACO position

outside of the 20 hours will be compensated by the town of Norwell.

In exchange for Cohasset's paying the regular salary for the officer, Norwell will provide the animal control vehicle, including covering maintenance and insurance.

Cohasset's animal control SUV needs to be replaced and it was not within the town's budget to either purchase or lease a new vehicle.

Griffin said in light of what each town had to offer, the partnership made sense.

"I think it's a great idea," said selectman Michael Sullivan, adding the town should regionalize services whenever feasible.

While selectman Rob Spofford agreed, he said the only down side to the agreement would be if Cohasset needs the animal control officer and he is in Norwell, or vice versa, and residents feel they aren't getting the service they deserve. Spofford said he would like Griffin to give frequent updates for the board on whether both towns feel the agreement is providing the same level of service.

Griffin said he and Police Chief James Hussey, whom the animal control officer reports to, have already discussed providing regular updates on the pilot program's progress. The two towns can back out of the one-year agreement with 30 days notice.

Both towns are facing tough fiscal times. Cohasset residents voted down a $400,000 operating budget override this spring and Norwell residents voted down one for $2.2 million.

Griffin said as a result, Norwell had plans to greatly reduce the number of hours for its animal control officer to help its bottom line, and the reduction may not have been adequate coverage for the town.

In Cohasset, while the animal control officer position remained virtually the same for fiscal 2006, although it was cut by five hours to make it a 20-hour per week position, transportation was the larger issue.

Both towns have been essentially sharing their animal control officer for years, as Hingham resident Paul Murphy holds the part-time position in both towns.

Putting things in perspective

For Elizabeth Stone, there is more to life than tennis

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

Elizabeth Stone

Elizabeth Stone could be preparing to embark on a Division 1 college tennis career right now, if she so desired.

As she puts it, however, tennis at that level becomes your top - maybe only - priority. And that is not her style.

"It's nice to be on a team, but I don't want it to be my life," Stone says.

Make no mistake about it: the recent Cohasset High School graduate is an intense competitor who wants to win as much as anyone, and probably more. Watching Stone in action on the court, it doesn't take long to figure that out.

With that said, if she loses - which is rare - it immediately becomes a thing of the past. Life goes on.

That kind of mentality is rare in tennis, one of the ultimate individual sports. If you lose, there are no teammates to blame - just yourself.

But Stone will never blame or get down on herself after a loss. And one of the biggest reasons for that is yoga, something Stone does at least once a week.

"Doing yoga helped me learn to live in the moment," she says. "I used to cry and be so nervous because I was so concerned with winning and losing.

"Now, if I miss a shot, I put that in the past. It's the same thing if I lose a match. The only thing that matters is this moment that I'm in right now."

At no point this season was that mindset more evident than in the moments following her loss to Norwell's Susan Bitetti in the finals of the South Sectional individuals tournament. After losing that match - in a tournament that many expected her to win this year - Stone's biggest concern afterward was getting something to eat for lunch.

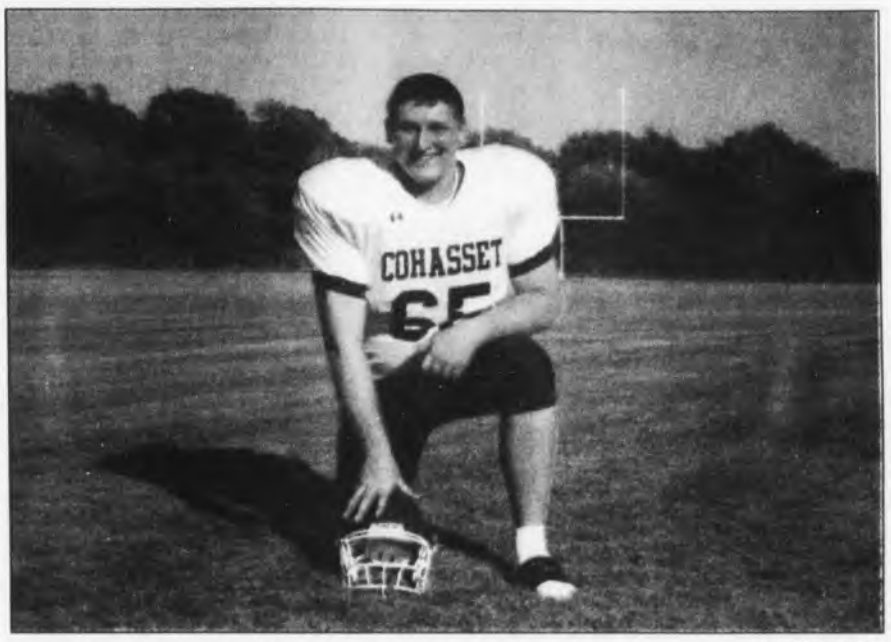
Stone was not disappointed to have lost, she said at the time, because she knew she gave it everything she had.

That is a lesson she learned as a 14-year-old when, as a top-10 ranked New England player for her age group, she was playing a match in a national tournament against an opponent from New York. Stone was dominating, winning the first set and going up 5-0 in the second set. At that point, nerves kicked in, and Stone wound up losing the second set and the match.

"I put my rackets down for a couple weeks after that," she said. "After that, I knew I didn't want to be in that situation ever again. I want to be able to say after every match that I put everything I have on the court."

And after one very memorable experience in the summer between ninth and 10th grade, Stone is putting everything she has into life, as well.

It was at that time Stone and 14 others went on an Outward Bound expedition to Colorado. The trip included kayaking, hiking, whitewater rafting and backpacking down a canyon. The group also spent time with the area's Hopi Tribe, an experience that Stone says "opened my eyes to different cultures."



Stone's life changed during this trip when she met three kids

Cohasset's All-American

Nick Arment named to exclusive preseason team

By Mark Goodman

Cohasset senior lineman Nick Arment.

Cohasset senior Nick Arment has been recognized as one of the best high school football players in the country.

The inaugural Reebok Preseason All-American Team was published in last week's edition of Sports Illustrated. Six teams were selected from six different regions, including the Northeast, which draws from New England and New York.

And of the 13 offensive players named to the Northeast team, Arment was one of them.

"I didn't realize that this is the level I had reached," said the 6-foot-3, 280-pound lineman. "To be honest, I feel like it was part luck. I didn't have any words when I heard about it; it's kind of overwhelming."

Overwhelming, maybe, but also well earned, says Cohasset football head coach Tony Rolfe.

"Obviously, I was quite pleased when I heard about it," he said. "I feel like he was quite deserving of it. For a high school kid being recruited by all these colleges, and then this, it doesn't get any better than that."

A year from now, Arment will likely be preparing to go off to a major Division 1 college program. Northwestern, Boston College, UConn, Syracuse, Purdue and Virginia have all been looking at Arment, who is heading to a camp at Northwestern later this month for potential recruits. Rolfe has also received calls from West Coast schools, including Stanford.

A co-captain for the CHS team this season, Arment earlier this week went to a camp at the University of New Hampshire, a Div. 1-AA program.

It is a lot of attention for an athlete from such a small town, something that Arment says he hopes makes an impression on younger athletes in Cohasset and surrounding communities.

"It's not where you play; college coaches don't care about that," Arment said. "It's how hard you work and how you try to better yourself."

Number-65 has put in that work, motivated by a lifelong goal.

"Since I was a kid, I always wanted to be an awesome football player," Arment said. "That was my dream."

There was a period of time last year when it looked like that dream may be coming to an end.

On the fourth play of Cohasset's Thanksgiving game against Hull, Arment broke his left tibia.

"My knee injury is probably one of the scariest things I've ever had to deal with," says Arment, who has a long scar on the inside of his left knee from the surgery. "I remember being in the hospital, crying, and saying 'I'm never going to play again.'"

What Arment says made him even more upset was missing the Skippers' Div. 3 playoff game with Westwood the following Tuesday. He was still in the hospital at that time, and had to rely on constant phone updates from Athletic Director Ron Ford and parents in the stands.

"Probably the biggest thing that got me was not playing in the playoffs," Arment said. "I wanted to play Westwood so bad after losing to them the year before [in the playoffs], and I couldn't do it."

The injury forced Arment to miss the basketball season, where he was one of two junior co-captains.

He has since been receiving physical therapy and working out at the Scituate Racket Club, and says he will be 100 percent for the beginning of practice next month.

"Things are going well," Arment says. "I'll definitely be ready for football."

A four-year varsity starter for the Skippers, Arment grew up in Randolph, New Jersey before his family moved to Cohasset when he was in the sixth grade. He has played football since Pop Warner, which was his first opportunity to play because he had always been over the weight limit (even then, he was always the biggest kid on the field).

The Arments are a football family; Nick's father, Frank, played for Holy Cross. His uncle, Dan, play for Colgate; both of those programs were Div. 1 at the time.

"There are a lot of big guys in the family," Nick says.

Lineage has been good to Nick Arment, who says he and his teammates cannot wait for the new season to begin.

"I don't think there's a day that goes by without us talking about football," he said.

Arment was not alone in terms of All-Americans from the South Shore, as Silver Lake star Jeff Smith was also named to the team.

CHS grads stand out for college lacrosse teams

Anderson, Faber contributing for Connecticut College

Tom Anderson and Ashley Faber, residents of Cohasset and graduates of Cohasset High School, recently completed seasons with the Connecticut College lacrosse program.

Anderson started every game on the Camel defense in his sophomore season. He corralled 37 ground balls and was a key contributor on a club that finished 5-4 in the New England Small College Athletic Conference.

A Dean's List Student at CC, Anderson is majoring in history. At Cohasset High, Anderson was a three-sport standout, captaining the football, hockey and lacrosse teams.

Faber appeared in nine games for the Camel women's lacrosse team. She notched three points and tallied her first collegiate goal in a 16-5 victory against Mount Holyoke College April 11.

Faber lettered in soccer, basketball and lacrosse at Cohasset High. She was selected as a Pilgrim Conference All Star for lacrosse in 2004.

Little Leaguers advance to district title game after winning extra-inning thriller

By Brian A. Hill Sr.
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Cohasset Little League Williamsport Team continues to amaze with Wednesday's thrilling 4-3 come-from-behind win over the vaunted Whitman squad at Hollingsworth Field in Braintree.

The victory keeps the team undefeated and places them in the final of the District 8 Championships this Sunday against the winner of Friday's Scituate-Whitman matchup.

Cohasset's Anders Goetz took the mound for the Cohasset nine and pitched a strong six innings that included five strikeouts. He also fielded his position well with four assists.

His battery-mate was Robert Jones. Goetz was backed up in the field by sparkling defense, including flashy glove work from shortstop Jeff Cavanaro in the first, digging a hot shot to his left and turning it into a 6-4-3 double play. Cohasset turned a second double play in the third with Goetz starting the 1-4-3 play after the first batter reached on an infield hit.

Whitman countered with ace A.J. Roche, who looked invincible through three innings, fanning seven of the first nine batters. Mike Monaco was the only player to hit the ball hard with a line out to center in the third.

A two-run blast from Whitman's Ryan Drew left Cohasset down 2-0 after three. In the top of the fourth they added another. After an infield hit off Goetz' leg, slugger Ryan Drew came to the plate again and

Legion finishing on a winning note

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

After a rough first half of the season, the Cohasset Post 118 Legion baseball has won four of its last six to improve their record to 7-10-1.

Head coach Mike O'Brien's club was hoping to pull out two more wins in their last two games of the year: Tuesday against Stoughton and last night against Quincy.

No matter what happens in those last two games, O'Brien said after Monday's 8-3 loss to Weymouth (one of the best teams in Zone 6) that he has been proud of the season his team has had.

"With the exception of two games, they've been in every game," said the coach. "We've been playing great defense lately and have been getting good pitching all year. A couple more big hits here and there, and we'd have won a few of those games we lost."

Following is the recap of Cohasset's (which draws most of its talent from Scituate) last six games:

Cohasset 5, Holbrook 3

Greg Ouellette went the distance on the mound to pick up the win on June 29.

After going down 1-0 early in the top of the first, Teddie Straughn tied it in the bottom of the frame with an RBI double, knocking in Terence O'Brien.

With the game tied at three in the bottom of the sixth, Cohasset went up for good on an RBI single by Shane Caffrey, who scored later in the frame on a Scott Carroll single.

Braintree 5, Cohasset 4

In one of the toughest losses of the year against playoff-bound Braintree on June 30, Caffrey pitched 6 2/3 strong innings in defeat.

Cohasset was up 4-0 after two, but Braintree chipped away at that lead with three in the third and two in the fifth. The lack of big hits O'Brien mentioned can easily pertain to this game, as Cohasset left four runners in scoring position in the late innings.

Mariner All-Scholastic baseball team

Cohasset's Luis Blanco and Tim Pilczak have been named to the 2005 Mariner All-Scholastic baseball team.

All-Scholastics are chosen from the public high schools of Marinerland's 13 towns: Abington, Braintree, Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Holbrook, Kingston (Silver Lake HS), Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Rockland, Scituate and Weymouth.

Next week, the Mariner announces its All-Scholastic softball team.

Luis Blanco - Senior (Capt.)
Catcher - Cohasset

Luis Blanco

Another great year behind the plate for the Skippers, earning his second straight Mariner All-Scholastic nod... A classic "see the ball, hit the ball" style hitter...Of all his eye-popping statistics from this year, perhaps most impressive is the fact that he struck out just three times in 63 plate appearances...From his cleanup spot in the order, Blanco put up some remarkable numbers this year, batting .429 and knocking in 18 runs...In 18 games, he hit an amazing 10 doubles...Hit .436 last year, and struck out just once in 55 at-bats in '04...Also has a very strong arm from behind the plate...Says one of his best baseball moments came last July in the Boston-based RBI Baseball League, where he hit a grand slam off a pitcher who was throwing in the 90's...As a METCO student from Dorchester, had to wake up at 5 a.m. every day to get to school, but didn't mind it at all, saying: "It was worth it. Just the overall experience I had in Cohasset was better than I ever expected"...Will play baseball at Fisher College in Boston, where he wants to study business administration...Is good friends with Fisher coach Scott Doolan...Cohasset coach Al Gallotta: "In terms of raw talent as a hitter, Luis is probably the best hitter on the team. He gets up there and does nothing but make contact."

Tim Pilczak - Senior
Second base - Cohasset

Talk about improving from one year to the next...After batting .167 as a junior, Pilczak hit .397 and led the team with a remarkable 25 RBIs, which included two separate 6-RBI games...Knocked in those runs while batting second in the order...Also led the team with three homers and was second with nine extra-base hits...Pilczak attributes his improvement to off-season weight-lifting and playing Legion ball last summer...Playing Legion again this season...Committed just three errors in the field...Also golfed and played hockey for CHS...Played on the hockey team's first line and was one of Cohasset's leading scorers...Will attend Kents Hill Prep School in Maine next year, and is planning to play hockey and baseball there...Hopes to continue his hockey career at a Div. 3 college or university, and is looking at studying business...In addition to his athletic exploits, Pilczak does a great Napolean Dynamite dance, which helped earn him the title of "Mr. Skipper" at the school's annual event in March...Cohasset coach Al Gallotta: "What Tim did offensively was very impressive. And for him to make three errors all year was fantastic. He made an incredible improvement in one year. In addition to lifting, I think it was a matter of becoming more mature, confident, and experienced."

Tim Pilczak

Terence O'Brien - Senior (Capt.)
Catcher - Scituate

Patriot League All-Star and Mariner All-Scholastic for the second straight season...Batted a solid .300 from his cleanup spot in the lineup, and led the team with three homers and 12 RBIs...One of the best catchers in the area; solid behind the plate with a strong, accurate arm...Has been Sailors' starting backstop since the middle of his freshman year, when the team made the Div. 2 South sectional finals...O'Brien says that run stands as one of his top high school baseball memories...Also had the chance to catch younger brother Blaine, a freshman, a couple games this year, saying: "It was fun; he throws hard and throws a lot of different pitches. He has a pretty good future ahead of him there at Scituate High School"...Catching for the Cohasset-based Legion team this summer, which draws most of its players from Scituate...Earned himself a near full ride at Northwestern Oklahoma State University, an NAIA Div. 1 school, to play baseball...Plans to major in physical education, with a likely minor in sports management...Interested in teaching and coaching baseball...Scituate coach Kevin Greer: "T was basically like another coach on the field. He was just your prototypical baseball player. You hear a lot about 'Dirt Dogs' like Trot Nixon and guys like that, and T was one of those players. He will be sorely missed."

Mark Rennie - Junior
Pitcher/First base - Scituate

Rebounded from a slow start to have another very good year as Scituate's ace on the mound...His second straight appearance on the Mariner All-Scholastic team...Finished the regular season with a 5-1 record and 1.97 ERA while usually being saved for the Sailors' best opponents...The lefty struck out 35 batters in 50 innings...Also had a solid year at the plate, batting .300 from the 8-spot with a homer and seven RBIs...Excellent with the glove at first base...Currently pitching and playing first for the Cohasset Legion team...Will play next month in a high school All-Star game in North Carolina, with the hopes of drawing attention from college coaches...Starting working this year with pitching coach Steve Almonte, whom he knows from his younger days at the South Shore Baseball Club...Also played basketball this year for SHS...Scituate coach Kevin Greer: "We brought him up as a varsity player his freshman year, and he has been strong for us right from the start. He's been a workhorse for us the last two years, and I'm looking forward to him being a number-1 for me again next year."

Chris Travis - Senior (Capt.)
Shortstop – Scituate

Played a key role in leading the Sailors to the state tourney each of the last two years...led the team in hitting (.355), runs scored, on base percentage and stolen bases (22) this season, and played some outstanding defense at the busiest spot on the diamond... not bad considering baseball is his hobby... hockey is his first love...also batted over .300 last season for the Patriot League champion Sailors as the starter at second base...a natural athlete with superb speed, reflexes and instincts...was also a member of the varsity baseball team as a sophomore...was a four year varsity starter in hockey, and earned Mariner All-Scholastic honors in 2004 and an Honorable mention in 2003...led the Patriot League in scoring this past winter with 24 goals and 26 assists in 19 games...finished his SHS hockey career with 130 points (73 goals, 57 assists)...younger brother Sean (a sophomore to be) is also a standout in baseball and hockey at SHS...older sister Caitlin (a senior-to-be at Keene State) was a standout soccer and softball player at SHS...a solid student...will attend Bridgeton Academy Prep School (Bridgeton, ME) this coming school year in the hopes of drumming up more interest from college hockey coaches... may play baseball as well at Bridgeton...has already talked to college coaches from Stonehill, UConn, Curry and St. Michael's...Scituate coach Kevin Greer: "You know, Chris is such a natural that if he ever really set his mind to baseball he could probably go on and be a very good college player. But hockey's his number one thing. I get that... "Chris was a great leader, great character kid. There was a great environment around this team, and Chris and my other captains (Jordie Spence and Terence O'Brien) had so much to do with that. It was a pleasure coming to practice and being around these kids every day."

Matt Greenberg - Senior
Catcher - Norwell

This is Greenberg's third straight year as a Mariner All-Scholastic...Earned it with another great all-around season...Usually batting third in the lineup, Greenberg hit .378 with a team-high 16 RBI...Again led the team in walks with 25 (in just 21 games), giving him an on-base percentage well over .500...Two-time South Shore League All-Star; didn't make it this year only because of a remarkably strong group of catchers in the league, including fellow All-Scholastic Tim Wells of Abington...Also a very good defensive catcher, with a strong arm and great ability to block balls in the dirt...Will continue his baseball career at the University of Southern New Hampshire, where he will play with fellow All-Scholastic Ryan Harrington of Hanover...Plans to study sports management...Currently a back-up catcher for the Braintree White Sox, the three-time defending Cranberry League champions...Norwell coach Tom Jacobs: "I think Matt has earned a lot of respect around the league for his accomplishments. He's a great hitter and is tremendous defensively; he blocks balls in the dirt that most kids don't get to."

Dave Liffers - Senior
Pitcher - Norwell

Once again a no-brainer for Mariner All-Scholastic acknowledgment...Won the South Shore League MVP award for the second straight year, in addition to being a league All-Star...Went 7-4 for the two-time league champions, with a 1.37 ERA...Far more strikeouts than innings pitched, and had great control to boot...Features a fastball in the mid- to high-80s that he can spot on both sides of the plate, with a devastating curveball...Pitched his best in the big games, including two complete game victories over Hull...Struck out 13 Pirates in an 8-1 season-opening win, then won a 1-0 game against the same team on April 28...Not bad with the stick, either, as he bat .355 this year, usually hitting in the fifth or sixth spot in the lineup...Will play baseball at the University of Mary Washington in Virginia, one of the top Div. 3 programs in the nation...Plans to study business administration...Norwell coach Tom Jacobs: "It doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure out where we'd be this year without Dave Liffers. He's a great competitor. He has great natural ability and matches it with competitive spirit. We knew that every time Dave took the mound, we had a very good chance of winning."

Greg Thornton - Senior Center field - Norwell

One of the best all-around athletes in the area, Thornton makes his second straight Mariner All-Scholastic team...Did everything a coach could ask of his leadoff hitter...Hit .372 on the year, and was a perfect 18-for-18 in stolen base opportunities... Caught stealing only once in his entire high school career...Put his speed to good use in the field as well, running down just about everything hit to him in center field...Once again a South Shore League All-Star, earning the same honor last year after batting .447...Also made quite a name for himself on the gridiron in the fall, rushing for over 2,000 yards and scoring 24 touchdowns...Will continue his football career at Bates College in Lewiston, Maine; may also play baseball there...Currently undecided on a major, but is leaning toward business...Norwell coach Tom Jacobs: "Greg was a spark-plug for us at the top of the order. He really put pressure on the opponent's defense with his speed. He was also strong defensively, with great range and a strong arm."

Ryan Harrington - Senior
Pitcher - Hanover

Without question one of the hardest throwers on the South Shore...Harrington was the Patriot League's leading pitcher with a 5-2 record an nearly untouchable 0.99 ERA...Struck out 70 batters in 56 innings and was voted the PL West Div. MVP...Also a league All-star, Harrington's prowess earned him Eastern Mass. All-star status...In that game, Harrington pitched a 1-2-3 inning on two groundouts and a strikeout...According to his coach, Harrington is only the third Hanover player to be named an EMass All-star...His overwhelming fastball (up in the high 80's) and excellent control made him a tough pitcher to face...Recorded a pair of shutouts in a season in which Hanover went 11-8 overall, 8-5 in the PL, and qualified for play in the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney...Harrington was recruited to play at the University of Southern New Hampshire, where he will be teammates with fellow All-Scholastic Matt Greenberg of Norwell...Hanover coach Fran Coyle: "Ryan throws very hard and his control is impeccable. He got a great package from USNH, which says a lot about his talent."

Mike Perkins - Senior
Infielder - Hingham

While the Hingham team struggled with consistency this season, Perkins was about as clutch as they come...This senior was the Patriot League's leading hitter for much of the year, going 31-for-64 for a .484 average...Was among the team's leaders in RBI with 14 and also blasted a pair of home-runs this spring...His play at the plate and defensively in the infield helped guide the Harbormen to an 11-8 overall record, qualifying the squad for play in the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney...Hingham was 7-6 in all of the Patriot League, while going 5-3 in their own East Div...A PL All-star in multiple sports, Perkins also played football and hockey at HHS...Last fall, Perkins helped guide the Harbormen to the PL title and appearance in the Div. 2A Super Bowl game...Perkins plans to continue his athletic career in college next fall.

Billy Maddock - Senior (Capt.)
Centerfielder - Marshfield

This Old Colony League All-star led the team in hitting with a .417 average, going 30-for-72 in his senior campaign...Managed to drive in nine runs from the lead-off spot and was second on the team in runs scored with 17...Went a perfect 7-for-7 in stolen base attempts this season...At centerfield, Maddock regularly put his strong throwing arm on display and led the team in outfield assists with five...A resident of Marshfield growing up, Maddock's family moved to England, but returned two years ago...Since then, Maddock has been a regular starter on the Rams team...The senior captain helped guide the rebuilding Marshfield baseball team to an 11-9 record and appearance in the Div. 1 South Sectional tourney...Maddock plans to attend college in the fall. Marshfield coach Bill Battis: "Kids coming up might possess similar baseball skills to Billy, but his character will be irreplaceable. He was always the first one on the practice field and the last one off. He was a tremendous team leader and selfless, complete player."

Anthony Lauretto - Senior
Pitcher - Pembroke

The Titans put their faith, and the fate of their first season, in the hands of this senior, and he didn't let them down...Patriot League All-Star came up huge in the final two weeks of the season as Pembroke almost pulled off a nearly miraculous run at the playoffs...Finished the year 4-2 with a 2.49 ERA...Led the staff in appearances, pitching in 13 of the team's 21 games...With a nasty changeup and pinpoint accuracy, he kept opponents off balance all season long...Would have won several more games had the young Titans avoided a dreadful offensive slump midway through the season...Held mighty Duxbury without an earned run for seven innings; only to lose in extra stanzas...Team captain played a solid third base in his spare time...Coach Joe Barresi: "He gave us everything we asked...They asked a lot.

Anthony Garofalo - Senior (Capt.)
Centerfielder - Rockland

After turning in a solid football season, this talented athlete capped his RHS career with a stellar baseball campaign...Garofalo was the only Bulldogs hitter with an average over .300, hitting .400 for the season...He was also the team's leader in RBI with 13, hit one homerun, and stole 13 bases...Also was the leader in extra-base hits with eight...Split his time on the field between centerfield and as the squad's No. 2 hurler...On the hill, Garofalo tossed a pair of wins and finished the season with a respectable 3.25 ERA...This Patriot League All-star's performance in both areas helped the Bulldogs win the PL West Div. title with a 5-3 record...Rockland was 12-8 overall, earning a berth in the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney...There the Bulldogs trounced Wareham (4-0) before falling in extra innings to eventual semifinalist, Somerset...Garofalo was also named to our football All-Scholastic team this past fall. Rockland coach Rick Fredericks: "Anthony was an awesome kid and captain. He kept us in a lot of games. I don't have any sons, but if I had my pick, he'd be a good choice."

Tim Wells - Sophomore
Catcher - Abington

What a year for this young rising star...Wells was a bright spot on a rebuilding team, leading his Green Wave squad in hitting with a .398 average...The South Shore League All-star also led Abington in RBI with 28 and smashed a pair of homeruns...A stellar catcher with a great arm, few opposing baserunners attempted to steal, when they did, Wells threw them out 70 percent of the time...His play both at and behind the plate helped guide the Green Wave to a 10-10 regular season, in which Abington won its final four games down the stretch to qualify for postseason play in the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney...There, Abington knocked-off Blue Hills, 9-0, before dropping a tight 7-6 contest to SSL rival and eventual semifinalist, Harwich...Also a talented football player at AHS, Wells will return to both squads next year, captaining the baseball team.

Putting things in perspective

who "came from absolutely nothing" to, at that time, attend school on scholarship.

"It was a very eye-opening experience. It made me appreciate everything I have," Stone says. "I feel like, as a child, I had a lot of high expectations with tennis. That trip really put things into perspective. I learned to enjoy tennis; it's not a job."

The youngest of three children - sisters Kate and Kelly also played tennis for CHS - Stone has been playing the sport since the age of 5 (her mother, Midge, has the pictures to prove it). She also has a passion for soccer, playing the sport until the eighth grade when she decided to focus on tennis.

Like everyone else in her family, Stone is an avid skier (although her father, Peter, has picked up snowboarding). She also plays golf, and was a member of the CHS team as a freshman and sophomore.

"I wasn't very good, plus I was the only girl on the team," she recalls. "I was really intimidated as a freshman, but the guys on the team were great to me. I didn't have any problems being the only girl."

Another of Stone's interests in life is to travel. She has been to England and France, and wants to see far-away places like Africa and New Zealand, where sister Kate studied abroad.

"I want to have a real open mind, and I think seeing all these cultures definitely opens your mind," Stone said.

In September, Stone will make her way to Vermont, where she is attending Middlebury College. She is leaning toward studying economics, saying she has always loved math (she took AP Calculus as a junior at CHS). And while she admits to not being particularly strong in foreign languages, she is interested in studying Spanish and Arabic at Middlebury.

Stone says she may also study Buddhism, an interest that likely stems from her father's Zen philosophy.

As for tennis, Stone joins a program, coached by Middlebury alum Nate Simms, that finished last season as the fourth-ranked Division 3 team in the country. She has already met many of her new teammates, and says she can't wait for practices to start in September.

"It's an intense schedule, but I'm excited for it," Stone says. "My teammates are awesome. They're very focused girls, very intense on the court. But they're great people off the court. I'm excited to be surrounded by people with that attitude."

In the meantime, Stone will be honing her game this summer, in addition to working at the Longwood Country Club in Chestnut Hill. She works with other college tennis players to teach the sport to kids between the ages of 3-12.

"I just feel like I've learned so much, it's nice to be able to pass on that knowledge," Stone says. "I think it would be neat to be a high school or college coach."

Of course, it would also be neat to be an economist living in Auckland. For Elizabeth Stone, everything is possible. And for that, she says she has her parents to thank.

"Both of them deserve a lot of credit for making me the person I am today," she said.

Children's Hospital Benefit Tennis Tournament

The 16th annual tennis tournament to benefit Children's Hospital is being held this weekend, July 16 and 17, on private tennis courts throughout Cohasset.

A reception for the players will be held tonight from 6:30 to 10:30 p.m. along with an auction at the Lightkeepers residence.

The finals are held at the Roy's court on Margin Street Sunday from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.

This charity tournament is a longstanding tradition in Cohasset. Originally started by Jesse Cox in the 1950's, it has always been a small, local, summer, mixed doubles tournament played on the many private courts around scenic Cohasset. In fact, some of our court owners participated in this event in the early years. The beneficiary has always been Children's Hospital.

The tradition lapsed in the 1970's, but was revived again in 1989 by a group of young residents with the help of their families and friends. After organizing the tournament for 10 years, the reign was handed over to a new group of lifelong Cohasset residents and friends. The current Committee, by coincidence or fate, each had personal experience with Children's Hospital.

Our mission is simply to "maintain the tradition and maximize the donation." The tournament's reputation and the institution itself have made it easy not only to attract players, but, contributors and volunteers as well. To maximize our donation, we have increased the scope of our fund raising effort with the inclusion of the Friday night auction. We are thrilled to have so many people join us, we thank you for your continued support, and we are proud to carry on this tradition.

The Annual Children's Hospital Benefit Tennis Tournament has a field of over 100 players ranging in age from 16 to 60+ years old. There are 57 teams comprised of husbands and wives, brothers and sisters, friends and neighbors, fathers and daughters, and mothers and sons. There is also a wide range of tennis experience and ability represented, from those players who are passionate about the sport to those players who dust off their rackets once a year for this event.

The Cohasset Benefit Committee cordially reminds all players that this is first and foremost a charity event. Have a great weekend meeting new people, playing some great tennis, and appreciating the beauty of Cohasset. We thank you all for helping to carry on the tradition and reputation of this tournament.

fouled off eight two-strike pitches before lacing a double to right center. Cavanaro prevented another score by going deep in the hole to keep a ball in the infield before Goetz ended the inning making an unassisted putout on a bouncer back to the mound.

Cohasset waited until the bottom of the fifth to start its rally. Third baseman Jamie Faber led off with Cohasset's second hit of the day, a single. After Gabe Seksay drew a walk, Jeff Durkin advanced the runner to third on a fielder's choice.

Pat Kearney then came to the plate. He stunned Whitman and ignited the Cohasset team with a rocket double to left scoring Seksay and Durkin all the way from first. Cohasset trailed 3-2 after five.

In the top of the sixth, Whitman threatened again. After a leadoff walk and a stolen base, Whitman's Tom Smith ripped a shot between center fielder Luke Ernst and right fielder Robbie Hill. The two outfielders collided and the ball fell between them. Ernst popped up and fired a cannon shot to Jones at the plate to cut down the vital insurance run. Goetz completed his superb outing by retiring the side.

With one out in the bottom of the sixth, Jones smashed a double of the wall in right center. The speedy John Collins ran for a limping Jones. Whitman's Roche looked like he was about to close it out when he got Cavanaro down 0-2 in the count. Jeff surprised everyone and hit an off-speed offering that bounced over the first baseman's head to score the tying run and the game moved into extra innings. Advantage, Cohasset.

Coach Joe Campbell plugged in his next pitching ace, son Ben, for the extra frames. Ben took the mound confidently and shut down the meat of Whitman's batting order, including inducing the dangerous Drew to fly out to Kearney in left field.

When Seksay led off the bottom of the seventh with a solid double off reliever Chris Adams, Cohasset smelled victory. Luke Ernst hit a hot shot that was knocked down by the second basemen but was unable to make the play.

With runners on first and third with one out, Kearney knocked in his third and winning run with a sacrifice fly to center to secure the Cohasset victory.

Stay tuned, the kids are talking about playing China!

Editor's Note: The following recap of Cohasset's other tournament games and team feature is written by head coach Joe Campbell.

After a first-round bye, Cohasset opened the tournament against Milton National, and followed that with a win over Braintree American.

Game 2 vs. Milton National: Jeff Cavanaro gave up two runs in the first inning and shut down Milton the rest of the way. He kept the Milton hitters off balance by changing speeds and throwing a nasty curveball. Jeff also had two hits in the game. Ben Campbell had the game winning RBI. The defense turned two double plays with Anders Goetz starting both of them. The Cohasset defense threw out three runners at home and one at third to smother any potential rallies.

Game 3 vs. Braintree American: Anders Goetz pitched brilliantly for six innings and got a 240-foot, two-run homer from Gabe Seksay in the first to put Cohasset in the lead. Cohasset took a 3-0 lead before Braintree rallied to take a 4-3 lead in fifth inning. In the bottom of the sixth, Goetz got on with an infield single with the tying run. It looked like we were headed to the losers bracket as Robert Jones was down to his last strike with two outs. Robert fouled a couple pitches off to stay alive, when coach Kearney whispered to Goetz at first base, "Get ready, he's going deep."

Jones, who excelled in this tournament last year as an 11-year old, was the hero for Cohasset as he sent the next pitch over the center field fence for a two out, two strike, "walkoff" homer.

Game 4 vs. Hingham: Cavanaro limited Hingham to one hit and the Cohasset bats came alive for a six-run fourth inning. Everyone contributed with big hits, including a two-run double from Luke Ernst and two hits from Robbie Hill. The infield defense was flawless, with Jamie Faber making several sparkling plays at third base.

This team is made up of nine 12-year olds and three 11-year olds. Everyone wants to play, and no one is afraid to make a mistake, as they feel the other players will "pick them up" if they make a mistake.

As we were warming up against Braintree for our game, the players were doing their usual routine and joking with each other and the Braintree coach yelled over to me: "At least they are loose!" This seems to give us some advantage, as the players are relaxed during the game. The team has the personality of the '04 Red Sox. This is the loosest group of ballplayers you will ever see.

Robert Jones plays the role of Kevin Millar as he is the head jokester. He showed up to practice yesterday in his "sweet leather" jacket that he wore in second grade. He was asked the day before what happened to the jacket. The whole team busted up when he jumped out his car as he arrived at practice.

Luke Ernst is Manny. You never know what is on his mind, and sometimes says things that are totally out of context for the situation. When he does something unusual you will hear a player say, "Luke being Luke."

Anders Goetz is Jason Varitek. He is all business on the field and has a "warrior" mentality. The players respect his savvy and have supreme confidence is his ability to make the big play.

Jeff Cavanaro is Curt Schilling. He is our ace pitcher and an intense competitor. He would also pitch on one leg if needed.

Robbie Hill is definitely Trot Nixon. His nickname is "Pigpen." His uniform is filthy by the second inning and the umpires are constantly reminding him to tuck in his shirt. If we could use pine tar, his batting helmet and cap would be covered in it.

Gabe Seksay is "Big Papi." At 5-foot-9 he is an intimidating presence at first base and at the plate. His big bomb against Braintree was Ortiz-like. He is always smiling and is a gentle giant with a deep booming voice.

Mike Monaco is Johnny Damon. Although much smarter than Damon, Mike wears the uniform better than all the others. His matinee idol looks and left-handed style is reminiscent of the #18.

Ben Campbell is the Orlando Cabrera on the team. He has more fun on the diamond than anywhere else, and it shows. He is very animated and also comes up with the little things that help win games.

Jeff Durkin is an excellent bunter and a rock at third base. He is so relaxed, his motto is "I'd rather be golfing."

Jamie Faber plays a third base style that reminds one of Bill Mueller. He is also a great hitter. He is the heir apparent to the "Pigpen" title.

Patrick Kearney is the big bat off the bench like Doug Mirabelli. Pat is capable of hitting one out at any time.

John Collins is a utility player extraordinaire. He can play every position on the field and is a great contact hitter.

story of the day in this July 5 encounter.

Greg Malley got the win with five shutout innings of relief, with Carroll (shortstop) and third baseman Kevin Signorelli turning in some unbelievable plays on the left side of the infield to preserve the lead.

Cohasset 6, West Roxbury 0

Ouellette was even better on the mound this time around, carrying a no-hitter into the sixth and finishing the game with a one-hit, six strikeout masterpiece.

"Greg pitched absolutely fantastic," O'Brien said. "He's had three great outings for us his last three times out."

Cohasset 12, Dorchester 1

It was the offense's turn to shine Sunday night, as Cohasset pounded out 16 hits in this easy victory.

Featured in that attack was an eight-run fifth inning, in which the team had seven hits and sent 13 batters to the plate. Tim McGrath went 3-for-3 to lead the charge, with Malley and Carroll also picking up three hits apiece. Signorelli went 2-for-5.

Caffrey pitched all seven innings and gave up just five hits. This game was Cohasset's fourth straight without committing an error.

Weymouth 8, Cohasset 3

O'Brien's team could have used some of those hits against Dorchester in this one.

After going down 3-0 early and 5-2 later in the game, Cohasset clawed back in it, only to see their rallies fall short.

"This has been the story of our season," O'Brien said afterwards. "Every game the last few weeks, we've had eight or nine guys left on base."

It was eight on this night, including leaving the bases loaded in the fifth with the score still 5-3. Malley walked with the bases loaded to bring home Carroll and make it a two-run game. Still with only one out, Mike Signorelli - who came on for an injured Mark Rennie at first base - came to the plate with the go-ahead run at first.

Signorelli hit a solid shot down the third base line, but it was snagged by the Weymouth third baseman, who continued in stride to step on third to double up Terence O'Brien, who had singled earlier in the inning.

"There's nothing you can do about that. That's just baseball," Mike O'Brien said.

After a shaky first inning, Straughn settled down on the mound for the home team and pitched a solid ballgame, going six innings and striking out six.

"Ted gave us a great effort; he pitched well enough to win," O'Brien said. "We just couldn't get any hits for him when we needed to."

Terence O'Brien went 2-for-4 on the day; Carroll was 1-for-3 with a walk and run scored.

Hingham Civic produces 'delicious' summer comedy

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Hingham and other South Shore residents are in for a rare treat – a midsummer local theater production.

Hingham Civic Music Theatre is breaking away from its "tradition" of taking the summer off from producing a play to present "Death By Chocolate" July 22 and 23. The show is being produced as a workshop, which means the rehearsals are a way for HCMT to train people interested in acting.

This may be the first or one of the only non-musical plays produced by the group, which led one HCMT "regular" to quip: "What do you get when you take the 'Music' out of HCMT? 'Death by Chocolate'!"

That doesn't mean HCMT has been inactive during past summers, though. A tap/audition workshop was offered once in anticipation of auditions for "Anything Goes" that fall. Two summers ago HCMT member Bill Boyer wrote and directed a fund raiser featuring several hand-picked South Shore singers in "An Evening of Song," which was a huge success.

"We wanted to produce a comedy this year so some of our usual crew members who wanted to get on stage and have a good time could have an opportunity to do so," Boyer said. "It also gave some of our members a chance to get some directing experience. That's why it's called a workshop. This keeps us busy and exposed during the summer to those who are looking to see a local theater production at this time of the year."

"Death by Chocolate" is directed by Vickie Kirichok, who also directed "Damn Yankees" and has performed in a number of HCMT plays.

"Death by Chocolate" is directed by Vickie Kirichok, who also directed "Damn Yankees" and has performed in a number of HCMT plays.

HCMT oftentimes actor and full-fledged volunteer Roy Harris offered a catchy synopsis of the goof-ball comedy "Death By Chocolate":

"On the eve of the grand re-opening of the newly renovated Meadowbrook Health Resort, celebrity chef Edith Chiles dies uttering a cryptic message. Cynical resort manager John Stone teams up with amateur sleuth Ed Parlor in a race to stop the killer before he (or she!) strikes again.

Meanwhile the intrepid duo must keep nosy reporter Margaret Daniels from finding out the ugly truth about Edith Chiles. Every member of the Meadowbrook staff is a suspect. Could it be Lady Riverdale, owner of the resort and a woman with a secret past? Or her long-suffering secretary Dyslexia? What about Ralph Deadwood, gym instructor and all around cad? Or Dick Simmering, the aerobics instructor? Anne, the panic stricken nurse? Or could it be "Sweet Pea" Meadowbrook, overweight and grieving daughter of the recently deceased founder of the resort? Or the upstanding Alfred. . . did the butler do it?

"Death by Chocolate" combines the elements of a classic murder mystery with a scathing satire of today's health-crazed world."

As a workshop participant, Hingham resident Joel Leonard, a 10-year HCMT veteran, is fine-tuning his acting skills. His favorite past role was the Cowardly Lion in the "Wizard of Oz," which brought down the house. He also played Luther Billis in "South Pacific" a decade ago.

"I'm thoroughly enjoying being in this comedy. It's something different and it keeps me off the streets," quipped Leonard, who is playing the part of Dick Simmering, "an overly enthusiastic gay aerobics instructor."

Pauline Rockwell, a HCMT member for two years and a dancer in past "Cabaret" Hingham Community Center fund raisers, is cast as Lady Riverdale in this summer workshop production. "I took this workshop as a lark. It's a big challenge to go from four lines in past plays to 400 in 'Death By Chocolate,'" she said with a twinkle in her eye. There's no doubt she's up to the task.

Rockwell is learning her lines while commuting from her home in Hanover to Quincy from a CD she made with a friend. "Maybe I'll be discovered," she quipped. This is quite a change for Rockwell, who is used to being a "stage mom" when her daughter Madison is in a play.

Rockwell also serves as corresponding secretary and membership chairman for the group. "I've found a whole new group of friends here," she said. "I was welcomed with open arms. I love these people. They're very open and warm."

And keep your eye out for the talented Ron Pomykala, who plays Alfred Mellox, the butler.

While HCMT shows are cast with great care, Boyer said no one who auditions for a play will be turned away. "Anyone who auditions will be in a show one way or other, although maybe not in a leading role."

"Death By Chocolate" show dates are Friday and Saturday, July 22 and 23, in Sanborn Auditorium at Town Hall. The play begins at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are available at Noble's Camera Shop in Hingham Square; Corson's Glass House, Rte. 53, Hingham; and at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Rte. 3A, Cohasset; and at the door. Tickets are a reasonable $8. For ticket information, call (781) 837-1499 (leave a message) or by emailing: hcmt50@yahoo.com.

Auditions for "Once Upon a Mattress" will be held Aug. 8 and 9 in Sanborn Auditorium. The show dates are in October.

HCMT is a non-profit community theatre group serving the South Shore and surrounding communities.

Lockhart returns to Music Circus in art center benefit

Keith Lockhart had an unforgettable experience on the South Shore last summer, as did all who attended the sold-out concert of the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra at the Music Circus. Lockhart brought down the house, and at the end of the evening promised his audience that he would return to Cohasset.

Keeping his word, Maestro Lockhart is appearing at the Music Circus for another summer concert, Saturday evening, July 30th, 7 p.m. to benefit education and exhibition programs at the South Shore Art Center.

This year, Broadway star Liz Callaway joins the Pops for a "Baby Boomer Bash." Callaway will sing such classics as "Feelin Groovy," "MacArthur Park" on a program with "Don't Touch That Dial" —a medley of musical memories from the '60s. The program ends with a Baby-Boomer Sing-Along, including hits from that generation's pop favorites such as "Your Momma Don't Dance," "Doo Wah Diddy", "(I Can't Get No)Satisfaction" and "YMCA."

Tickets are on sale now, and can be purchased at the South Shore Music Circus Box Office, open daily from Noon until 6 p.m., or through Ticketmaster, 617-931-2787, or www.ticketmaster.com.

Two special concert packages are available for those who would like to support the Art Center, spend some time with Keith Lockhart, feast on a fabulous buffet and prolong this remarkable summer evening. At the party last year, Lockhart stayed for hours greeting friends and admirers while graciously posing for photos and partaking of the excellent food and festive libations. A limited number of package tickets are still available.

IT'S HAPPENING

Seaside Adventures applications accepted

The Center for Student Coastal Research (CSCR) is accepting applications for the second session of its Seaside Adventures program. This is the third year for the CSCR camp that was developed as an entry program to introduce and familiarize children with the coastal and ocean environment. The summer camp program is an outdoor activity camp for students ranging from third to sixth grade.

The camp is age-appropriate, exciting, with hands-on projects introducing basic concepts of oceanography, marine biology, and environmental science. Although the camp may seem like a science class, fun is the first priority. The goal of Seaside Adventures is to have the students walk away with a better understanding of their coastal environment as well as have had a good time accomplishing this goal.

Returning to the camp for a third year is Cohasset Middle School science teacher Lisa Mullen who has been modifying and improving the curriculum that she originally developed. Lisa additionally hopes to become better acquainted with the new faces she will see in the fall.

Interested parents can visit the camp's website at www.ccscr.org for additional information on camp activities and to fill out an application. Each session lasts two weeks and includes six classes in total. The cost of the camp is $150 per session. CSCR is located at 40 Parker Ave, last building on the left. Access to CSCR is also convenient from Government Island and the sailing club via a boardwalk that spans the salt marsh. Call 781-383-0129 if you have any questions or concerns. Space is limited.

Dog training

The Recreation department will hold a five-week, beginner dog training course on Wednesday evenings from 6 to 7 p.m. starting Aug. 24. This will be the last session given until next season.

Good Manners for Beginners teaches the beginner level obedience commands such as sit, stay, come, down, take, drop, heel, don't touch, watch me, and other basics. Also covered are behavioral problems such as jumping, mouthing and chewing. Handouts on dog obedience and behavior training are given out at each class.

For more information call 781-878-4343 or 781-383-4109.

CHS 1985 reunion

The Cohasset High School Class of 1985 will celebrate its 20th reunion on from 7 p.m. to midnight, Saturday, Aug. 13 at the Red Lion Inn.

For more information contact: Ingrid Anderson Drago at 781-585-8976, or Kristen O'Brien Holland at 781-319-1979, or Meghan Kelley Gosk at 919-969-7759.

Free harbor side cookout

On Saturday July 16, the Center for Student Coastal Research (CSCR) and Cohasset Maritime Institute (CMI) are celebrating the summer with a free harborside cookout. Please come by for this excellent summer activity for adults and children.

CSCR and CMI are on the water in Cohasset Harbor. Stop by 40 Parker Avenue across from the Cohasset Sailing Club. Check out the facilities and learn about the programs. Spaces are still available for both CMI and CSCR's summer activities and there will be a chance to sign up while you are there.

The cookout is from 4 to 6 p.m. and if there are any questions call Susan Galligan at 383-0765.

Drunk men moon motorists

Police say two inebriated men mooned several motorists passing by the Town Common on the Fourth of July.

The series of calls to the dispatch center reporting "two males on the sidewalk by the common pulling their pants down to passing cars" started at roughly 5:30 p.m.

One caller said she saw a man "pull his pants down and moon her."

Police Chief James Hussey said the two men, who were under the influence of alcohol, were taken into protective custody.

The Mariner does not print the names of people taken into protective custody because it is not an arrest.

One of the men lives in Cohasset and the other is from Braintree.

Hussey said the officer on the scene uses his discretion whether to make an arrest. In this case, the officer would have considered the seriousness of other potential charges and put the men in protective custody.

"Based on the alcohol involved, the officer determined this was the better way to handle the incident," Hussey said.

"Is your bulkhead leaking, rotting or rusted?"

On the South Shore

JULY 14 - JULY 22, 2005

Liza Minnelli, will perform Sunday at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset

Liza's live at Music Circus

Star of stage and screen busier than ever these days

Liza Minnelli laughs out loud when she hears that the supermarket tabloids are reporting that she is about to get married for a fifth time.

"I can tell you one thing, there ain't never gonna be another Mr. Minnelli. I'm never getting married again and the only Mr. Minnelli there will ever be is my father, Vincente Minnelli," Minnelli said last week by telephone from her New York home. "I haven't seen the coverage yet and I may not. One of my best friends called me from California the other day, however, to tell me pictures of us together had made the papers and that the story was about us getting married. Now I know what he was talking about."

Whether it's because of her many professional triumphs or personal travails like her still pending divorce from husband number four concert promoter David Gest, people have been talking about Liza May Minnelli virtually since her birth on March 12, 1946, to the acclaimed film director and his second wife, the legendary Judy Garland. For the singer and actress, who headlines at the South Shore Music Circus on Sunday, it is all just a part of a lifetime in show business.

"I'm not sure now who it was, but I agree with the person who said 'I would do what I do for free. What I get paid for is the hassle of being a celebrity.'"

She is one of the few celebrities who has earned equal acclaim for her acting and singing. Minnelli made her film debut at age 3 in the final scene of her mother's 1949 film, "In the Good Old Summertime." In 1963, she made her Broadway debut in a revival of "Best Foot Forward." The following year, Garland invited her daughter to perform with her at the London Palladium and a new musical star was born. Before she was out of her teens, Minnelli had won her first Tony award for "Flora The Red Menace" in 1965. Since then, the versatile performer has received two more Tonys — a special award in 1974 and one for "The Act" in 1978. In 1972, Bob Fosse's direction helped Minnelli win both an Emmy Award for her landmark television special "Liza with a Z" and a Best Actress Academy Award for "Cabaret."

"Everything I do comes from acting, even my songs," says Minnelli, whose recurring role on the Fox-TV comedy series "Arrested Development" has earned critical raves. As Lucille Austero, Minnelli plays a rival of series star Jessica Walter, as Lucille Bluth, and the on-again, off-again romantic partner of not one, but two of her sons, Gob and Buster Bluth. "Lucille II," as Minnelli's character is known, is an often off-balance femme fatale. "A lot of what I do I made up myself. Mitch (series creator Mitchell Hurwitz) and I worked closely together on the character and whatever made us both laugh we put in. Lucille II suffers from vertigo and takes the occasional tumble. They wanted to use a stunt double, but I said that if they were choreographed I could do them myself. I do all my own dizzy spells. It's just much more fun for me as a performer and much funnier for the audience, too" explains Minnelli, who not only acts in but is a fan of the series. "It's just outrageous and very, very funny. If you watch it once you're hooked."

Later this year, Minnelli will be seen on the big screen, for the first time since 1991's "Stepping Out," in "The Oh in Ohio." Written by Billy Kent and Sarah Byrd, and directed by Kent, the independent feature also stars Parker Posey, Paul Rudd and Danny DeVito. Parker Posey is a really good friend so I said yes to the project, before I even read the script," explains Minnelli. "I play a sex therapist who fully embraces the world of sexuality by teaching women to enjoy their bodies. I hope people will come out and see it, because the picture is very funny."

In addition to reviving her acting career, Minnelli has also provided the idea for a new movie in development by "Chicago" producers Craig Zadan and Neil Meron, director Bob Ackerman and writer Kimberly Reed. "Craig and I have wanted to do a musical together for a long time. We just couldn't seem to find just the right project. Finally, I came up with a story idea about a woman who owns and runs a small nightclub in New York. Craig really liked it and put it into development. It is a story with music, but I don't want to give away too many details."

Her personal life may continue to make news, but it's her television, film, recording and concert career that has the star's focus these days. "I've never been stronger. I dance every day. I'm happy because I'm working with a group of friends who are supportive, loving, kind and thoughtful. That's what's solid."

Liza Minnelli performs at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier Street, Cohasset Sunday, July 17, at 7:30 p.m. For tickets and information, call 617-931-2787 or visit www.themusiccircus.org

Disney puts you in cruise control

Wonder and delight await in Bahamas, private island cruise

By SHELAGH COLLINS

PORT CANAVERAL, Fla. -- A gaggle of little girls wearing fluffy princess gowns and flip-flops waited in line to make their grand entrance onto the cruise ship.

Suddenly, Mickey appeared -- in full "tails" tuxedo -- to greet his little followers. They flocked to him, running from their parents who loaded down with luggage and day bags to snatch them back.

Some parents felt a slight tug toward the larger-than-life character themselves, and this is the lure of a Disney cruise: You suspend your cynicism and allow a glimmer of that bibbidy-bobbidy-boo to grow with every day onboard the Disney Wonder.

The 83,000-ton ship holds up to 2,700 passengers and has activities for everyone from infants to the terrible teens and their parents too.

The ship's newsletter, the Daily Navigator, lays it all out as easily as the turndown service, which includes chocolates and clever animals made of bath towels.

On our four-day sailing from this port near Orlando the ship made two port calls with two days at sea, which my husband and I and our toddler spent mostly in one of the three onboard pools. As accommodating as the ship is, the trip gets monumentally better when you dock at a beautiful beach where children can play and parents can get fruity drinks delivered to their lounge chairs.

The first stop was the Bahamas capital of Nassau, where friendly local women reached out to touch the face of my 2-year-old, red-headed daughter, asking if she wanted braids. After that first day on shore, little girls all over the ship were shaking their heads like maracas.

We could have gone on organized tours such as scuba diving to explore ship wrecks off the island, but instead we hit the Straw Market for cheap trinkets, and the beach for the rest of the day. The tides were strong, but it was amazing to see starfish, stingrays and even small sharks in their natural environment.

More impressive, though, was the second port of call, the Disney-fied island of Castaway Cay, where the beach is so pristine, it's hard to believe the tiny, perfect white seashells aren't from a mold.

After building a sandcastle good enough for Cinderella, then trashing it like Godzilla, scarfing down lunch at Cookie's BBQ, and mugging for a few shots with a bathing suit-clad Minnie, it was time for me to leave my family for a nap on the adults-only beach and a massage in an open-air cabana at Serenity Bay.

Families can laugh and play on a Disney Cruise Line adventure to Castaway Cay, a pristine private island just for cruisers.

Once I blocked out the 20-somethings outside my window yelling for four Coronas and a margarita ("Top shelf!"), I took a breath to savor the moment. My massage -- although a bit sandy -- was bliss.

Tip for moms parting ways with kids and husbands: Don't give them all the sunblock. Mothers all over the ship commiserated that evening in our formal gowns, with no hope of hiding our hideous red lines. "But your kids aren't burned, right?" we joked.

Disney offers a daily camplike experience for kids age 3 and up and a nursery for those even younger (for an additional fee). While the children explore, parents can savor dinner at Palo, the grownups-only gourmet restaurant on Deck 10 (an extra fee is charged), go for a dip in the adult pool, and partake in adult activities like art auctions, bingo, martini tastings, as well as several adult lounges and nightclubs (there are also lavish Disney show productions suitable for the whole family).

Meanwhile, the kids are well occupied with games and climbing apparatus and watching -- what else? -- Disney movies -- all under the watchful eye of an international group of counselors. Older kids (8 to 12) get to explore the world of Gak, as well as other fun scientific experiments.

For teens (13-17), there's Aloft, a mysterious universe, replete with big screen TVs, a dance floor and an Internet Cafe, totally separate from the rest of the ship. Here they can hang out, sip their (alcohol-free) cocktails, and meet kids from all over the country, all as horrified as each other to be on a family vacation of any kind.

Our accommodations were a spacious deluxe cabin that would comfortably sleep four and had separate areas for the tub/shower and toilet, as well as a veranda, perfect for viewing the sunset.

Good service is a whole cut above on the Wonder. Uniquely on Disney ships, you dine at a different restaurant each night and are assigned one wait staff team that follows you on your family's rotation. Going to dinner was like being a hanger-on to a child star.

Our servers (Muhammed and Dimitri) treated our daughter like a china doll, meeting her at the door and carrying her to our table. Soon they were standing next to her every few minutes, cutting her meat, switching her plain milk to chocolate in response to her cooing, flirty requests, picking up her fork before her parents even knew she dropped it, doing magic tricks to make her laugh. By the end of the second day, she was throwing herself into their arms to say good night. They were almost as special as Snow White.

Close, but not quite.

When we finally laid eyes on the raven-haired princess, we were in the glass elevator overlooking midship. There was a commotion below that caught our daughter's eye and kept her pressed against the glass from the seventh floor to the third. When we stepped into the atrium and got a closer look, it was 2-year-old heaven. "Mama, she's beautiful," she whispered. Bibbidy-Bobbidy-Boo.

The four-night Bahamas cruise is priced from $499 to $3,249 per adult, depending on when you travel and what sort of accommodations you choose. There are special rates for kids sharing a cabin with adults. Three-night cruises are also available as are weeklong packages that combine a cruise with a visit to Walt Disney World. For reservations, call 800-951-3532, or book online at disneycruiseline.com.

Park upgrades sought for Beechwood

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Plans have been drawn and a complete renovation for the Beechwood athletic field — to the tune of $500,000 — is in the works. Improvements would include new grandstands, fencing, and the installation of lavatories, as well as a new "tot lot" playground for young children.

At the December 2004 Special Town Meeting, voters approved allocating $33,000 to hire a designer for the reconstruction of the park. Since then, the Beechwood ballpark committee has been working with BSC Group, Inc. of Norwell to draft plans. Members of the Beechwood ballpark committee, including Glenn Pratt, Fred Siegel, and Merle Brown, along with David Crispin of BSC, presented their vision to selectmen at the board's July 12 meeting.

> "We love a challenge, and this is a challenging little piece of real estate,"
> David Crispin of BSC

"We love a challenge, and this is a challenging little piece of real estate," said Crispin, adding there are many areas of the field which have different elevations and some of the base lines for the ball field are not what they should be.

"Left field is nine feet higher than second base," Crispin said.

But what is even more problematic is the orientation of the field, as it faces due west. Crispin said a pitcher standing on the mound has the sun in his or her eyes when the sun is going down.

Currently, home base is located on the corner of Beechwood and Doane Streets. The new park will have home base located nearest the corner of Doane Street and Bates Lane, with the pitcher facing south.

Behind home plate will be two new dugouts, and an "on deck" batter's circle for each team. There will be a new 12-foot by 72-foot enclosed batter's cage located in the outfield. There will also be new concrete "grandstands" which will have polyurethane seats.

The field isn't limited to ball games, it can also be used for soccer. While some of the soccer field would be on dirt, as it overlays third base and a portion of

School budget woes over for fiscal 2005

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Fiscal 2005 will end on a somewhat positive note for the school department as it looks as if it will be able to give back roughly $136,000 to the town. However, the reimbursement is relatively small when compared to the roughly $760,500 added to the budget over the course of the past two years.

But Supt. Denise Walsh said she is optimistic the funding provided to the schools has helped put the budget back on the right track.

"We will close in the black because of the town," she said, praising the actions of the school committee.

"We're going to start fiscal 2006 on a level playing field," she said.

In April 2004, the town passed a $400,000 operating budget override solely to benefit the school department's fiscal 2005 budget. In addition, at the December 2004 Special Town Meeting, reserve fund transfers were approved totaling $160,500 — $93,500 to cover school utility costs and $67,000 to cover school unemployment. At the 2005 Annual Town Meeting, an additional $100,000 was transferred into the reserve fund to cover school department expenses, such as utility costs, and an additional $100,000 was added directly

85 units not ruled out for Cook Estate

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Building 95 units of senior housing on the Cook Estate had previously been ruled out in light of wastewater disposal issues. However, three new bid proposals have been submitted for the Sohier Street site, and one bidder has made building roughly 85 units a possibility.

Cohasset resident Donald Staszko, owner of Cohasset Plaza and president of Cohasset Associates which operates out of the plaza, submitted a $5.15 million base bid for the Cook project. That bid includes 65 total senior housing units. However, he also submitted a supplemental proposal which would allow the project to use his adjacent land for wastewater discharge, which could add 20 units to the project, therefore increasing the profit the town could make on the land.

Staszko has put in a supplemental offer of $5.95 million should the town decide to explore the latter option.

Of the 65 units in Staszko's development, dubbed "The Oaks Farm," a name the bid proposal says is reflective of the farming history of the area, 41 would be town homes built with a "classic South Shore flavor." There would also be two low-rise apartment buildings, designed to emulate the architectural details

Memory of Jason will burn bright

Herbert Jason, at the dedication honoring the two light keepers who perished when Minot Ledge Light was destroyed.

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

As a little boy, Herbert Jason would listen intently as his mother would tell him the story of the two brave Cohasset light keepers who perished when Minot's Ledge Light was destroyed. More than 80 years later, the story still strongly etched in his mind, Jason saw to it a memorial fitting of their dedication was built in their honor.

Today, that memorial will not only remind people of the sacrifice those two men made, but of the love and dedication Jason had for preserving the maritime history of his beloved seaside town. Jason passed away Thursday at the age of 91.

"He was always trying to make improvements," said Jason's grandson John Small, adding Jason always had a project of one kind or another he wanted to see accomplished. "He had a lot he wanted to get done."

> "He was always looking forward, not backwards. He threw himself into everything he did."
> Resident Joe McElroy commenting about Herb Jason

Looking back on his life, it is clear to see Jason had the drive and motivation to make wonderful things happen. Small said the work his grandfather did on Government Island is just one of many things he will be remembered for.

Jason spent four years lobbying and fundraising to make his longtime dream of building the monument in honor of light keepers Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson, a reality. Under his watch, the granite lightkeepers monument was built, as well as a replica of the first Minot's Ledge Light, which took the lives of Antoine and Wilson when it toppled during a storm in 1851. A talented coppersmith, Jason made the copper dome for the lighthouse replica.

For his work, Jason was given a commem-

LOSE 12-30 LBS OF BODY FAT IN 12 WEEKS OR LESS!

Joe Palumbo

At 41, I had reached the stage where I was starting to talk myself into accepting the fact that my suits no longer fit, my back was starting to ache from time to time and I just worked too hard to "find" time to exercise.

After just about one year of consistent work, Fitness Together has helped me to achieve a huge turnaround in my personal fitness. I have dropped just about 20 pounds, have developed overall body strength, have way more energy and my back feels great.

Finally the biggest key has been the level of accountability. The one on one nature of the program forces you to meet your goals because you know there is someone there keeping you to task. The regular assessments with updated facts, figures, and charts help you see your progress over time.

Instead of wasting money and time at some huge gym, where I was on my own to figure out what to do, with little real help from staff, I have invested in a place that supports and develops my personal fitness goals.

The staff at Fitness Together motivates me to meet my goals, teaches ways to meet those goals and most importantly holds me accountable for results.

School officials tighten reins

Handbook revisions to address drugs, alcohol, and tardiness issues

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Middle-High School handbook has been revised substantially for next year with regards to the school's policies for drug and alcohol use and tardiness.

Assistant principal Mike Gill and former principal Jack DeLorenzo came up with suggested revisions with the help of a handbook revision committee, which included faculty, parents and staff. Gill presented proposed changes to the school committee Thursday, July 14, and all were adopted to be included in the 2005-2006 school year handbook.

Throughout the course of every year, incidents occur which Gill said prompts handbook changes for the following year. He said in recent memory, there have been a few instances where students have come to school under the influence of either drugs or alcohol. Gill said the new policies will ensure there is no distinction made between the severity of each offense, giving a clear message to students that neither behavior is acceptable.

"The punishment should be severe and equitable," he said, adding previously, a student would be given a 10-day suspension for drug use and a two-day suspension for alcohol.

"Now, it will be five days for everyone on their first offense," Gill said, regardless of the substance.

In addition, the wording will be changed in the handbook to include punishment for those who are under the influence, even if the student drank or did drugs off school property. Gill said over the years some students who he joked may become good lawyers one day, have argued they have not violated school policy by coming to school under the influence because they were not in possession of anything illegal and did not distribute on school property.

"It's little things like that we pick up on every year," Gill said.

The policy for drinking and drug use during athletic seasons will change as well. Previously, the first offense would suspend students from playing sports for 30 school days. However, Gill said the policy has been changed to encompass 30 calendar days instead, as students who were suspended during vacation would be subject to many more days than their peers, as vacation days would not count as school days, and they would miss games and practices that occur during vacation weeks.

"We want to try to make it the same for everyone," he said.

In addition, the MIAA (Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association) rules have also changed. Previously, a student under the influence would have been suspended from sports for either two weeks or two games, whichever was the longest time period. Now, students who are found under the influence must miss at least 25 percent of their games during the season, which still isn't as tough a punishment as the school doles out.

"We'll carry it on from one sport to another, and even from year to year," said Gill, to ensure if a student breaks the rules, the punishment will be carried out.

School committee member Pam Wilson asked whether counseling is mandated for students who use drugs or alcohol on school grounds. Gill said it is not mandated, but the schools do make recommendations and have a list of professionals they give to parents.

"We do take it very seriously," he said, but schools are limited by what they can mandate. "Most of the students are not necessarily addicts, they're just kids who make mistakes."

However, Gill said there is a system in place with the school psychologist and guidance counselors and those who are addicted may be subject to meeting certain evaluations before allowed back into the classroom.

"In recent years, we did have a student for which we required a psychological evaluation before they could come back," he said.

In addition to changes in substance abuse policy, Gill said the rules for tardiness will change.

"The high school in particular struggles with tardiness," said Gill, adding some in the school department believe even if the start time for school was extended to 10 a.m., there would still be problems with students making it there on time.

Previously, there were no consequences for the first six instances of tardiness, but "we thought that was a little too lenient," said Gill. After that, students would have been required to attend "Saturday school," or detention held on Saturdays.

"Having 30 kids in Saturday school is too many," said Gill, but added students arriving late to class is a disruption that needs to be dealt with.

This year, after four instances of tardiness, students will be subject to punishment, but Saturday school, which is a deterrent, but still has students showing up late during the week, won't be in the mix. Instead, students will attend early morning detention, which will ensure they begin the school day on time.

"If they have trouble getting in on time, they'll be in even earlier the next day," said Gill.

In the event the early morning detention doesn't correct the problems with tardiness, the punishment will get progressively worse. After the 10th incident, the student will be suspended from co-curricular activities for one week.

"If kids can't get themselves to school on time, they shouldn't be going off to football or field hockey practice," said Gill.

Other more minor changes to the handbook will include:

- Updated plagiarism and cheating policies
- The memo of understanding between the schools and police department
- New breathalyzer protocols voted on this year
- New National Honor Society policy

But perhaps one of the most significant changes will be required parent participation. Parents will for the first time be required to sign a tear-off sheet to be returned to the school, to ensure they, and their student, have read the material and understand the rules. Gill said this should help the administration tremendously in disciplining students.

Rebecca Teal, Jennie Curley, Nick Lieberman and Austin Meyers put finishing touches on their hot dogs during a barbecue Saturday at the Cohasset Marine Institute for Seaside Adventures. It offers age-appropriate, hands-on projects introducing oceanography, marine biology and earth science for students in third, fourth, fifth and sixth grades. Some of the programs are Beachcomber, where students have fun at local beaches checking out tides, beach composition and other activities along the shoreline. There is also an Under the Sea session, where students learn to build aquariums and explore ocean dwellers.

Birthdays boost retirement benefits

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Entering into retirement on their birthdays is an option Cohasset teachers are increasingly taking advantage of. While classrooms might be required to go through a transition period when the teacher departs, birthday retirements entitle retirees to more compensation from the state.

According to the Massachusetts Teachers' Retirement Board, retirement is based on three factors: age; years of service; and the average of the three highest years' salaries. Generally, the greater any of the three factors is, the greater the retirement allowance will be.

"There is a monetary advantage to retiring on your birthday," said Supt. Denise Walsh.

If a teacher finishes the school year and is 64 years old, benefits are calculated based on that age. However, a teacher with an October birthday could opt to come back to school in the fall, begin the school year, and retire on the day they turn 65, therefore increasing their age and in turn, the percentage of benefits he or she is eligible to receive.

The issue was brought up at the July 14 school committee meeting, when Walsh announced the retirement of Frances Cronin, a high school English teacher. Cronin will be leaving the district in November, which concerned Leonora Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Road.

"Isn't that disruptive to students?" Jenkins asked, as suddenly, mid-year, a class must change teachers.

Walsh said at the high school level it is much easier for students to make the transition to a new teacher than it would be at the elementary level. She said she hopes to be able to find a replacement that can work with Cronin and hopefully overlap schedules before she leaves. Walsh added, making the decision to retire is not taken lightly, and it requires three years of planning.

Cronin isn't the only teacher to take a birthday retirement. Last year, English teacher Marie Schleiff and math teacher Elizabeth Beatson retired on their birthdays. School committee member Adrienne MacCarthy said those retirements worked well because both took place near school vacations.

"The kids came through it better than the parents," she said.

Director of Finance Michael Buckley said the schools aren't the only one seeing birthday retirements.

"We do it over here (at town hall)," he said, adding it allows employees to collect an additional 1 or 2 percent by adding the extra year. Retirement compensation is paid by the state.

Town's budget shortfall is not insurmountable

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The town will be able to make up a fiscal year 2005 shortfall of $289,000.

Last winter's snowy weather led to a high snow and ice deficit, which coupled with other budget overruns, contributed to the problem.

But Director of Finance Michael Buckley said the budget will be balanced through inter-departmental shifting of funds, a practice recently approved by the state, and money from the reserve fund. The advisory committee approved the reserve fund transfer last week.

Buckley explained it is now OK for a town to transfer up to 3 percent of its budget to cover shortfalls without town meeting approval. He plans on transferring money from the fire, public works, and elder affairs budgets.

The snow and ice deficit totals roughly $175,000. Buckley said currently, there is $70 million in supplemental aid ready to be divvied up by the state, and depending on the formula, Cohasset could receive roughly $72,000. There is also roughly $100,000 in the reserve fund which the school department did not use, which could be used as well.

The police department spent $337,000 on overtime in fiscal 2005, which ended June 30. Buckley said there were a number of vacancies during the year. The town pays overtime to fill those shifts.

The town originally appropriated $175,000 for police overtime; a supplemental appropriation of $100,000 was added to that. Still the town has a deficit of roughly $53,500. Buckley said in past years, overtime deficits have been made up with unexpended salary money, but those funds were used to provide for the turnover in the police chief position.

Buckley said utility costs at both Town Hall and the new, larger library were higher than anticipated, which left a $28,500 building maintenance deficit. In addition, more maintenance was performed on the town's buildings.

"We now have a maintenance department under way and for the first time we know what expenses are necessary to protect our investments. We did not have that information when we prepared the fiscal 06 budget," Buckley wrote in a memo to Town Manager Bill Griffin.

Legal costs are also a budget buster, and came in $15,000 higher than anticipated. The town originally appropriated $120,000, and an additional $100,000 was added between the last two town meetings. Buckley projects the town has incurred expenses of $235,000 to date. Last year, the town incurred expenses of $378,000.

Town Counsel works for the board of selectmen as well as the town manager, but also supports the defense of the board of health, conservation commission, planning board and zoning board of appeals.

Other deficits include roughly $3,000 for the town manager clerical pool. Buckley said when the town manager's assistant resigned last year, he determined payroll should be under the direct supervision of the treasurer/collector.

"In order to accomplish this transition, it was necessary to increase the hours of the part-time position in the office to that of full time," he said.

Selectmen advertising has also generated almost $5,000 in bills. In addition to normal advertising, the board was required to advertise for the vacant town manager and treasurer/collector positions.

Electric rates were higher than anticipated and therefore street lighting is over by $2,000 and the recreation lighting bill was over by $310. Plumbing and gas inspections have also cost the town an additional $1,700.

The Cohasset Elder Affairs office experienced an unusual number of computer and photocopier problems during the year which cost money, and there was an increase in the number of residents receiving its newsletter, which resulted in a deficit in the postage account. Together, the CEA is over budget by $2,900.

The town pays for 50 percent of life insurance premiums for a $5,000 policy and enrollment was higher than expected, which leaves a deficit of $932. An additional $800 will be paid for property and liability insurance, to cover the new vehicles purchased throughout the year.

Buckley proposed a reserve fund transfer of $27,903 which was approved by the advisory committee. In addition, there is $4,000 from the fire department budget and $2,000 from the elder affairs budget which will be transferred. A position opened up at the DPW which wasn't filled in anticipation the new employee would need to be laid off at the beginning of the new fiscal year, which left $20,000. That, along with $3,000 from the worker's comp budget, and $2,000 from the budget used to pay water bills will be shifted as well. Buckley said there is also $56,000 in health insurance expenses that can be transferred, as less people signed up than the town had anticipated.

to the school budget to cover any other fiscal 2005 costs which might present themselves.

Director of Finance Michael Buckley said all of the $100,000 which was added to the reserve fund will come back to the town and will likely cover the snow and ice deficit. Of the other two items in the reserve fund, all $93,500 will need to be used to cover utility costs, and roughly $28,500 of the $67,000 will be used for unemployment costs. The advisory committee approved the transfers for the school department last week.

In addition, roughly $2,500 of the $100,000 which was added to the school budget has been used, and Walsh said, "We're still drawing on that."

Financially, the school department has been in a serious situation for the past two years. Planning began for the fiscal 2005 budget in October 2003.

The first red flag to present itself was an unexpected rise in utility costs. The actual total cost for utilities for all three schools was roughly $260,000 — but the schools had only budgeted $95,900. This left a deficit of $164,025, due in large part to the construction going on at the middle-high school with utilities used by workers during extended hours, with some effect from Deer Hill construction. In addition, the increased price in natural gas coupled with a severe winter pushed the budget further off its mark.

Not only were the utility costs much higher than had been budgeted, the line item for substitute teachers had been underbudgeted by almost $74,000 and the cost of covering contractual obligations alone was roughly $490,000.

At that time, former Supt. Edward Malvey said the schools would have needed a budget increase of 13 percent to maintain services. However, with a decrease in state aid, the school budget reflected an increase of 6 percent, which was not sufficient considering the bills that were coming in.

To get the school budget back on track, in April 2004, Town Meeting and then voters at the ballot box passed a $400,000 operating budget override.

However, troubles for fiscal 2005 were far from over as unpaid bills from fiscal 2004 began surfacing. A $93,000 gas bill and $65,000 worth of unemployment costs came in just as fiscal 2004 came to a close.

At the Special Town Meeting in December 2004, both fiscal 2004 bills needed to be paid and an additional $93,500 for utilities and $67,000 for unemployment costs was added to the fiscal 2005 budget, which was underbudgeted. Voters, with the $400,000 override fresh in their minds, agreed to give the money to the schools, but only if it was placed in the reserve fund, which requires advisory committee approval for use.

As the year went on, more bills from fiscal 2005 began to surface and the town was asked to approve adding another $100,000 to the school budget, on top of another $100,000 to the reserve fund, to ensure the money was available to cover their cost and any others that might arise.

Ward McElhinny aboard his boat, the Liberty, which he recently captained on a 645-mile expedition from Marion, Mass., to Bermuda.

McElhinny takes Liberty with the odds

By Adam Read-Brown
CORRESPONDENT

Ward McElhinny's finish in the Marion to Bermuda Cruising Yacht Race on June 23 was literally against the odds.

Before the race had even begun, a computerized ranking system, called Americap 21, projected the placing of all 75 boats in the race, taking into account boat size, shape, style and other factors. It projected McElhinny's 34-foot Liberty in 74th place. Instead, McElhinny and his crew arrived in Bermuda in third place in their class and sixth place overall.

Justy goes to show, don't believe everything a computer tells you.

The Marion to Bermuda race has been held every other year since 1977 by the Beverly Yacht Club, the Blue Water Sailing Club, and the Royal Hamilton Amateur Dinghy Club and puts a focus on family teams and amateur racing. McElhinny, who lives in Cohasset, described the atmosphere as extremely laid back and relaxed. Talking about the entirely volunteer staff, he remarked that both in Marion and Bermuda people couldn't have been nicer.

McElhinny's boat Liberty is a Sea Sprite and was placed in Class E with 13 other boats. Boat class is generally determined by size, acknowledging the advantage that large boats have in speed over the smaller ones. The boats in this particular race ranged from 33 to 72 feet, making the Liberty one of the smallest boats racing.

McElhinny did not pretend to have had grand plans or lofty goals heading into the race, saying that he and the crew of the Liberty just wanted to make it [to Bermuda] safely. He and his crew had never sailed together before this race, and when asked about preparation, McElhinney said they all agreed "to just show up in Marion and set sail." The crew was comprised of three other people: Ward's brother, Ted McElhinny, Craig Seeley, who grew up in Cohasset with Ward, and friend Greg Arnold from Marshfield.

Although the computerized ranking system was unable to pin down the Liberty, computers were an integral part of their journey. Not only was Ted McElhinny — the boat's designated navigator — using a GPS system to navigate, but the families of all four men were able to track the boat's progress using an online computer program. The program, connected to satellite tracking devices on the deck of each boat in the race, updated the progress of the boats every two hours.

Setting out on the 645-mile expedition on June 17, things began smoothly. McElhinny remembers the experience fondly, saying that it seemed that they "couldn't have planned it better." The four men took three-hour, two-man shifts throughout the journey, sleeping when possible. On board, they ate mostly frozen stir fry, which they heated up on the boat's two burner stove. "We didn't eat gourmet," McElhinny chuckled, "but we didn't starve."

The first rough spots came two days into the race when the Liberty, approaching the Gulf Stream, ran into a storm. Thankfully, the Liberty was sound and had no problem riding the 14-foot seas and 40-knot winds that continued for two days. McElhinny noted that he and the crew never felt threatened, and said they were all confident the Liberty would get them through.

When the storm finally subsided, the crew of the Liberty found themselves in a much better position than they could have foreseen. Thanks to the high winds, they were able to cover much more distance during those two days than many other boats that found themselves farther west with no wind at all. This included many of the larger boats in other classes.

During the race, McElhinny said, it is rare for boats to see each other, and therefore not surprising that so many of the boats did not experience the storm that the Liberty did. The fact that boats are so spread out made it all the more remarkable that nearing the finish after five days the crew of the Liberty found itself neck and neck with another boat in its class. According to McElhinny, they had been tailing the boat for a while and they managed to edge it out by a few boat lengths at the end, thus securing the third place spot in Class E.

The four men were extremely pleased with their finish, but McElhinny said they were really just happy to have made it there safely. "Doing well was just the icing on the cake," he said.

McElhinny has sailed in this race three other times, back in the 1980s with his parents. He has fond memories of these earlier races, recalling that his mother always served as the "celestial navigator" before boats were equipped with GPS navigation. However, this was his first go-round as the captain of a boat, which he discovered is more responsibility than just being a crew member. He had to fill out all the forms, prepare the boat, buy groceries, and make sure all the safety equipment was in good working order. But in the end, it all made for a satisfying finish.

After finishing there was little rest for the weary — spending only two nights in Bermuda, three of the four men then turned around and sailed straight back home (Greg Arnold had to leave for a business trip.)

At the finish, the crew of the Liberty also had a celebrity sighting: race participant Geraldo Rivera on his 60-foot yacht, the Voyager. They beat him.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Open meeting law needs changes

There is serious merit to a plan by certain lawmakers to make sure more public business is actually conducted in a public forum.

We agree it is time for needed changes and a re-education of the state's Open Meeting Law. Key Democratic lawmakers are poised to pursue changes that we think are long overdue. We have witnessed far too many meetings through the years where it was clear debate and decisions were made out of the public eye. Unfortunately, backroom politics continues to thrive in many of the commonwealth's communities.

"There are very few reasons a meeting should be closed to the public," noted state Rep. Antonio Cabral, a Democrat from New Bedford. We think he is right on the money. He is an advocate for reviewing the state's Open Meeting Law because, as he stated, he believes "the taxpayers should understand what's going on in those discussions."

Many of us in the newspaper and media business argue vehemently when officials want to conduct business in secret sessions, behind closed doors. It's clearly not in the taxpayers best interests to wrangle over issues in private. Their voices need to be heard on the issues and their opinions need to be sought. And the business conducted must be out in the open, so it can be publicly recorded by reporters who, unfortunately, often end up being one of the few in a meeting audience.

As it stands now, local committees and boards have to state publicly why an executive session — or closed-door meeting — is needed. Lawmakers, in a report filed recently by the Statehouse News Service, say they recognize there are certain reasons to hold these sessions, but still believe the law needs to be re-evaluated and possibly tightened.

Lawmakers also acknowledge there are far too many committees and boards violating the spirit of the open meeting law, many not intentionally but nonetheless breaking the law.

In Plymouth County, for example, there were 18 investigations conducted in 2004 by the district attorney's office related to open meeting infractions. Only three resulted in violations. In Norfolk County, there were 24 investigations in 2004 and about 12 violations. Often the punishment is a letter to the board with a slight slap on the wrist.

We're not asking that stronger punishments be handed out, simply tougher laws that are actually enforced and in keeping with the spirit of open democracy. Perhaps that's naïve, but it is worth pursing.

A new sport to wrestle with

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Just when we thought we'd plumbed the depths with the revival of the sport of roller derby on TV, guess what happens?

The sport of beach wrestling, that's what.

I am reliably informed (which means I read it in USA Today) that the first East Coast National Beach Wrestling Championships will be held Aug. 13 in Long Beach on Long Island, N.Y.

The sport, if it can be called that, is big on the West Coast, where everything is big, including the muscles on the governor of California and the home run total of a San Francisco outfielder, both of whom have more than a nodding acquaintance with steroids.

But I digress . . .

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth, beach wrestling was something --- I hesitate to call it a sport --- that was done under a blanket after sundown at Nantasket and Humarock and victory didn't win you any gold medal.

In fact, it was more likely to win you a smack upside the head. Most of the time, anyway.

The rules of beach wrestling don't differ that much from the kind that's done in a ring, except in the uniforms --- shorts only for men, one or two-piece suits for women. No thongs and no bikinis.

"We don't want exposure," says Paul Kieblesz, an international referee. "The sand can pull pants off."

A statement that is guaranteed to attract a full (and probably hopeful) house at the East Coast Championships, no doubt. Somehow I don't think all of those in the stands will be studying advanced wrestling techniques.

Participants are not allowed to throw sand in an opponent's face, either, and officials apparently have the option of calling injury time to get a wet towel for the wrestler who "accidentally" gets a faceful of sand.

Beach wrestling has not yet been proposed as an accredited Olympic sport but if everyone can manage to keep his or her pants on at Long Beach Aug. 13 there's a good chance the International Olympic Committee will add it to the schedule for 2008.

After all, didn't they just drop baseball and softball from the roster as being too obscure for international games?

Already, the sport of beach volleyball has a spot in the Olympic games with the gold medal going to Brazil, the silver to Spain and the bronze to Switzerland in 1004. The Swiss beach volleyball team must be like the Jamaican bobsled team; they have to go out of the country to find a practice venue.

The International Wrestling Federation, or whatever they call it, recognized beach wrestling as part of it "new world of wrestling" last year, joining freestyle, Greco-Roman, Sumo and arm, but not the kind that they play under a blanket at Nantasket and Humarock.

And certainly not "yagli gures," the national sport of Turkey in which wrestlers cover their bodies with olive oil and grapple outdoors on the grass.

HEALTH NOTES

By S.N.Bobo

Healthy Travel

Each year millions of Americans travel abroad for vacation, business, or to visit friends and family. Unfortunately, about half of these international travelers get sick or injured during their trip. In 2003, of the 1,268 cases of malaria reported to CDC, all but 10 were related to travel overseas. Of the approximately 400 cases of typhoid fever each year in the U.S., 70% are related to trips abroad. In 1997, 40% of all preventable deaths of U.S. citizens abroad were due to injuries.

The good news is that most travel-related sickness and injury can be prevented. You are likely to be a traveler who has an enjoyable trip free from illness or injury when you follow these tips:

Be informed: Learn about travel health risks and what to do to avoid them before your trip.

Four to 6 weeks before your trip find out what you need to know about staying healthy and safe in the area where you are traveling by visiting the CDC's Travelers' Health website: http://www.cdc.gov/travel/index.htm Using the site is simple. Choose the destination (by country or region) you are traveling to and you will get information about: disease and safety risks and how to avoid them,special notices about outbreaks or other disease activity, and what vaccinations or preventive medications you should or will be required to get.

Some countries require you to present a certificate that says you have had a yellow fever vaccination before you can enter. Only authorized healthcare providers can give the yellow fever vaccine.

Also, textbook-style information is available in the "Yellow Book" http://www.cdc.gov/travel/yb/index.htm. The 2005-2006 edition includes new and updated maps, useful tables for special needs travelers, and new sections on jet lag, legionellosis, and norovirus infection to name a few.

Be ready: Get any vaccinations or medicines that you will need before your trip.

If you will need any vaccinations (shots) or medicines, go to your healthcare provider or a travel medicine clinic at least 4 to 6 weeks before your trip. This will give your shots time to work so that you will be protected during your trip. If it is less than four weeks before you leave, you should still see your doctor. It might not be too late to get your shots, medications, and other useful information.

Prepare a traveler's health kit so you have all the medications and supplies you may need before you go.

Be smart while you travel: Make sure you follow travel safety tips while you are on your trip.

Wash your hands often and well with soap and water or an alcohol-based hand rub to help kill germs, especially before eating! If you are going on a cruise, read this fact sheet about handwashing, too, and reducing other health risks while on a cruise.

Drink only bottled or boiled water or carbonated (bubbly) drinks from sources you trust. Do not drink tap water or fountain drinks, or eat ice cubes.

Only eat food that has been fully cooked or fruits and vegetables that have been washed and peeled by you. Remember: boil it, cook it, peel it, or forget it.

If visiting an area where you might get malaria, make sure to take your malaria prevention medication before, during, and after your trip, as directed.

If you might be bitten by insects (like mosquitoes or ticks) use insect repellent (bug spray) with up to 50% DEET. The label on the container will tell you the DEET content.

Make sure you know how to protect yourself from injury while you travel. Motor vehicle accidents are a leading cause of injury deaths in travelers. Swimming-related accidents are also a major cause of injury among travelers.

Follow these tips and recommendations, or call the Board of Health for specific questions and you are more likely to remain healthy and safe, so you can enjoy your time away from home. Happy traveling!

Rep. Bradley on 'Our Town'

This week on "Our Town," Cohasset's very own cable TV show, Mark DeGiacomo and Pat Martin sit down with state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, to talk about what's happening on the state scene as well as what he's doing to help resolve Cohasset issues. Bradley represents the Third Plymouth District that includes Cohasset, Hingham, Hull and one precinct in Scituate.

Roving reporter Rich Ofsthun will also promote the first anniversary of the talk show.

Tune in starting Monday at 9p.m.; the program will be repeated Tuesday at 9:30p.m. and Thursday at 8:30p.m. on Comcast channel 10. Stay tuned Cohasset and stay informed!

16th Annual Children's Hospital Benefit Tennis Tournament

In 1989, a group of Cohasset residents revived a town tradition when they organized a tennis tournament to benefit the Children's Hospital. Jesse Cox started the tournament in the 1950's, and it ran every year for two decades before fizzling out in the 1970s.

The tournament has been running strong, however, since its re-inception 16 years ago. The mixed doubles competition is held on the many private courts in scenic Cohasset.

Sunday's finals were played at the Roy's court on Margin Street.

Brian Marsden and Elizabeth Stone took first place in Sunday's finals.

Tennis wasn't enough for Sam Sullivan, Jake Sullivan and Matt Froio, who took the time to play with Jewel the beagle.

Eric Roberts connects with an overhand smash at net.

The two faces of Gov. Mitt Romney

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

The gap between Mitt Romney's two personas grew perceptibly wider this week. Mitt Romney, Governor, found himself facing a possible conflict with his lieutenant governor should Mitt Romney, Presidential Hopeful, decide to please the red states by opposing an emergency contraception measure social conservatives find objectionable.

Mitt Romney, Governor, took center stage at the State House to laud his "gold standard" death penalty bill, which relies on technology and judicial fail safes to promise foolproof capital punishment. The next day, Mitt Romney, Presidential Hopeful, figured to be the center of attention as he discussed the future of secondary education at the 97th annual meeting of the National Governor's Association - in Iowa, a state the governor could well be frequenting soon. Just to remove any doubt as to how divided Romney's attention has to be these days, he began the week with a trip to Washington D.C., talking health care with GOP heavy hitter John Engler, now head of the National Manufacturers Association, and speaking to the House Conservative Fund, a staunchly right-wing group of US representatives devoted not just to defeating Democrats, but moderate Republicans so long as they're not already serving in the U.S. House.

Such is Romney's life nowadays - and of course, because his life is that way, the political community and media have a two-track mentality as well. Just as Mike Dukakis had to deal with intimations that his stance on, oh, motorcycle helmets for example, carried national connotations, everything Romney takes up is now viewed with a presidential prism.

For this week, the focus was on the contraception bill, mostly because the governor's 2002 running mate, Lt. Gov. Kerry Healey, took pains to make clear she favors the bill and would urge the governor to sign it. Actually, Healey may get the chance to do so herself, should the House and Senate come to agreement on the bill and send it to the Executive branch while Romney is out of state on vacation. In any event, senators and representatives need to resolve whether Catholic hospitals should be exempt from the law before it moves on to the governor's desk, whoever is sitting behind it at the time. Conservatives feel that access to contraception on an "after the fact" basis constitutes a form of abortion.

In discussing the matter with reporters, Healey told the News Service and The Boston Globe about a dozen times that she is firmly pro-choice. That's p-r-o c-h-o-i-c-e; you got it? Healy's emphasis of this point was another manifestation of the role Romney's ruminations now play. She knows who's the front-runner for the GOP here if he goes national, and she wanted to stress that Romney may be "in a different place," as he puts it, than he used to be on abortion, but she's in the same place as the majority of Massachusetts voters.

All in all, the contraception bill represents an enormous test of the governor's thinking about his future. Romney is not going to win re-election by making vetoes that please conservatives. They will be voting for him anyway if he runs for re-election. What he needs to do is hold on to the moderates who secured his election in the first place, and a veto of the contraception bill is a conservative act, not a moderate one, in this state at least. A veto will be interpreted as sending the signal that he's not tremendously interested in preserving his re-election options.

It is entirely possible that Romney will yet decide he wants to stay here and risk losing re-election. He may still opt for another attempt at increasing his base in the Legislature, after his last sally left him with zero victories and more dependent than ever on Sal and Bobby to give him a victory. He may in the end choose to continue alternating between criticizing Democrats for their liberal ways and vowing to work with them, while suspicions deepen daily that he won't finish his second term.

If those sound like unappealing options, that's why he'll surprise so many people if he does choose to stay - and this week provided more evidence that his decision is the most important political story in Massachusetts. "I honestly don't believe you would ever see a single innocent person face the death penalty under this legislation." Thus Romney summed up the question at the heart of debate over his new capital-punishment proposal - and made clear his conviction on the matter. Others were dubious though — the brother of Unabomber Ted Kaczynski testified, arguing that the threat of capital punishment might deter family members from turning in troubled and dangerous relatives as he did. And skeptics said the science of capital punishment may have improved, but not the sociology — that poor people and those of color are still more likely to face capital charges.

• Romney and HHS chief send out call to all seniors about prescriptions. U.S. Health and Human Services Secretary Michael Leavitt came to Boston Thursday to help Gov. Romney send an urgent message to seniors. Through the news media, the leaders were trying to get the word out about new prescription drug coverage available under the federal Medicare program starting in January. "I am afraid we will find two years from now that some seniors may have been dipping into their pockets and paying for things they didn't have to because they didn't hear about it," Leavitt said at the Reggie Lewis Center in Roxbury.

• House approves sales-tax holiday and movie tax break by big margins. One bill was aimed at all consumers, one aimed very much at niche consumers, but both had the same goal: stimulate the economy. The sales tax holiday is said to have created $400 million in economic activity in 2004, its inaugural year; as with last year, items over $2,500 would be exempt. Following House action, the Senate opted to make it a two-day holiday in mid-August. The movie maker's tax cut seeks to address a problem that cropped up during the infamous Teamsters difficulties of the George Cashman era: what used to be viewed as a prime spot for film making has become a state from which producers shy away. House leaders are hoping to reverse that trend by offering sales tax exemptions to outfits that spend $250,000 or more making movies in the Bay State in a year; the legislation also calls for the state to authorize a 15 percent payroll tax credit and a 25 percent production tax credit, with total tax credits for any single production limited to $7 million. The vote was 147-4 in the House. Actor Chris Cooper and his wife came to Beacon Hill Monday to press the case for the bill, joining prime sponsor Thomas O'Brien (D-Kingston).

• School building authority puts out largest debt issuance in state history. The Massachusetts School Building Authority, the newest significant state agency, went out to bid this week with a $2.5 billion bond issue. The bonds, backed by revenue earmarked from the sales tax, will pay for new schools and 427 improvement projects already underway or finished.

• Nurses flock to State House to push mandated ratios; opposed by hospitals. Nurses were out in droves last Wednesday - ironic, given Health Care Financing Committee Senate Chair Richard Moore's contention that the big problem facing Massachusetts when it comes to nurses is that there're not enough of them. The Mass. Nurses Association wants the Legislature to adopt legislation similar to that in California, where the ratio of patients to nurses must be 6:1 - and all the way down to 1:1 in emergency trauma wards. The hospitals staunchly oppose the proposal, saying it would damage the financial condition of the institutions, and endanger patients. Moore, who sides with the hospitals signaled skepticism of the nurses' approach: "We have to focus on creating more nurses, not creating more vacancies," he said during a press conference that preceded a five-hour public hearing of the Public Health Committee. A 25-member commission chaired by Moore and Rep. Stephen Tobin (D-Quincy) is searching for a compromise on the nursing-staffing issue.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on five roll calls and local senators' votes on six roll calls from the week of July 11-15.

$907,357 FOR TEEN PREGNANCY PREVENTION (H 4200)
House 149-0, Senate 38-0, override Gov. Romney's $907,357 reduction in funding (from $2 million to $1,092,643) for teen pregnancy prevention programs. Override supporters cited the success of these programs and argued that it is irresponsible to cut this important funding that would prevent unwanted pregnancies. In his veto message, Romney said that he reduced the funding to the amount projected to be necessary. (A "Yes" vote is for the $907,357).

Sen. Hedlund	Rep. Bradley

$2.5 MILLION FOR CHILD CARE PROVIDERS (H 4200)
House 139-11, Senate 38-0, override Gov. Romney's $2.5 reduction in funding (from $12.5 million to $10 million) for the newly-created Department of Early Education and Care to increase reimbursement rates for subsidized child care. The department provides financial assistance to help low-income families and families with medical or parenting problems purchase child care.
Override supporters said that the $2.5 million is necessary to ensure that these important facilities and workers and are paid a decent wage to care for children. They noted that many of these workers are paid less than employees at McDonald's. Override opponents said that the House had originally approved only $7 million in funding and argued that the $12.5 million eventually agreed upon by the House and Senate is excessive. In his veto message, Romney said that he reduced the funding to the amount projected to be necessary. (A "Yes" vote is for the $2.5 million. A "No" vote is against the $2.5 million).

Sen. Hedlund	Rep. Bradley

SALES TAX HOLIDAY (H 4220)
House 151-4, Senate 37-1, approved different versions of a bill allowing consumers to buy most products that cost under $2500 the weekend of Saturday, August 13 without paying the state's five percent sales tax. The Senate version includes both Saturday, August 13 and Sunday August 14 while the House one applies only to Saturday. Proponents of the Senate version said that a Saturday-only holiday is unfair to some religious groups whose Sabbath is on Saturday. The tax waiver does not apply to the sale of telecommunications, gas, steam, electricity, motor vehicles, motorboats, meals, tobacco or any single item that costs more than $2500. Supporters said that the holiday would be a boon to retailers and consumers and noted that a similar one-day holiday in 2004 saved shoppers some $10 million and resulted in a 500 percent increase in retail sales for the one day. They argued that the state's tax revenue loss is offset by increased revenue from the meals and gas tax generated by shoppers. Some opponents said that the holiday actually generates little additional revenue for stores because consumers would buy the products even without the tax-free day. They said that the Legislature should be looking at broader, deeper tax relief and not a tiny tax-free holiday. Others said that the Legislature should not vote for tax cuts when it has not restored all the cuts that it has made over the past few years in local aid, education and human service programs. The Senate version now goes to the House for consideration. (A "Yes" vote is for the tax-free holiday. A "No" vote is against it. Senators' votes are on the two-day holiday while representatives' votes are on the one-day holiday).

EXEMPT ENERGY-EFFICIENT APPLIANCES (H 4220)
House 21-133, rejected an amendment exempting energy-efficient appliances and products from the state's five percent sales tax during the two-week period between October 1, 2005 and October 14, 2005. The products and appliances would include air conditioners, refrigerators, freezers, dishwashers, washers, dryers, dehumidifiers, ceiling fans and light bulbs. Amendment supporters said that this exemption would save an estimated $400,000 for consumers and would also be good for the environment. Some amendment opponents said that this exemption is unnecessary because consumers can avoid the tax by purchasing these appliances during the recently-approved August tax-free holiday. Others said that the Committee on Telecommunications and Energy is considering a similar bill and argued that members should reject this amendment until the bill has a public hearing and is considered by the committee. (A "Yes" vote is for the two-week tax exemption for energy efficient appliances and products. A "No" vote is against the two-week tax exemption).

INCENTIVES FOR MOVIE MAKERS IN MASSACHUSETTS (H 4252)
House 147-4, approved and sent to the Senate legislation providing some tax exemptions and tax credits to movie production companies that film in Massachusetts. The measure would also allow the companies to use state-owned land at no cost. Supporters said that Massachusetts is losing million of dollars in business and jobs to 30 other states that offer these incentives. They noted that only a handful of major films have recently been shot in Boston because companies find other states more financially attractive. Opponents said that the state should not be offering tax cuts to the entertainment business when local aid, education and human service programs are still underfunded. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill offering tax incentives for movie makers. A "No" vote is against the bill).

IMMEDIATELY REDUCE INCOME TAX RATE TO FIVE PERCENT (S 2092)
Senate 6-32, rejected an amendment reducing the state income tax rate from 5.3 percent to five percent. Voters in 2000 approved a gradual reduction of that year's 5.85 percent tax to five percent by January 2003 but the Legislature in July 2002 froze the rate at 5.3 percent. Amendment supporters said that state tax collections are exceeding expectations and noted that the state can afford the reduction. They argued that it is time for the Legislature to respect and honor voters' opinions. Amendment opponents said that the state simply cannot afford an estimated $600 million revenue loss. They argued that the Legislature should put some revenues in the Rainy Day Fund and restore cuts that it made in local aid, education, health care and human service programs prior to considering any income tax cut. (A "Yes" vote is for reducing the income tax rate from 5.3 percent to five percent. A "No" vote is against the reduction).

Sen. Hedlund	Rep. Bradley

REDUCE INCOME TAX RATE TO FIVE PERCENT OVER THREE YEARS (S 2092)
Senate 13-25, rejected an amendment reducing the state income tax rate from 5.3 percent to five percent over a three-year period. Arguments for and against the reduction were similar to those heard during the debate on the immediate reduction to five percent. This gradual reduction was supported by seven senators who had opposed the immediate reduction. They said that the three-year reduction was a reasonable compromise that would help taxpayers but still allow the Legislature to restore some the budget cuts of the past few years. (A "Yes" vote is for the amendment reducing the state income tax rate from 5.3 percent to five percent over a three-year period. A "No" vote is against the reduction).

Sen. Hedlund	Rep. Bradley

REDUCE INCOME TAX RATE TO FIVE PERCENT WHEN LOCAL AID INCREASES (S 2092)
Senate 38-0, approved an amendment reducing the income tax rate from 5.3 percent to five percent when local aid to cities and towns is restored to fiscal 2002 levels. Amendment supporters said that this fiscally responsible amendment strikes the right balance by ensuring that the income tax is cut only when the devastating local aid cuts of the past few years are restored. (A "Yes" vote is for the amendment).

found in larger homes throughout Cohasset. Each would have 12 units, for a total of 24 apartments.

Cohasset is currently in desperate need of affordable housing; it is trying to meet a 10 percent affordable housing threshold set by the state. Twenty of Staszko's apartments will be affordable by state housing standards, and four will be market rate, bringing the total affordable housing ratio for the project up to 31 percent.

Fourteen of the apartments would be two-bedroom affordable units, which would be roughly 1,700 square feet and cost $1,302 per month. Six would be one-bedroom affordable units which would be roughly 950 square feet and cost $1,085 per month. There would also be two two-bedroom market rate units, which would be roughly 1,700 square feet and cost $1,800 per month, and two one-bedroom market rate units which would be roughly 950 square feet, and cost $1,500 per month.

The town homes would be attached condominium-style buildings, grouped in duplexes and triplexes. There would be three floor plan models for the town homes:

Σ One with 2,050 square feet of living space, a two car garage, two bedrooms and two and one-half baths

Σ One with 2,050 square feet of living space, a one car garage, two bedrooms and two and one-half baths

Σ One with 1,700 square feet of living space, a one car garage, two bedrooms and one and one-half baths

All three styles would have cathedral ceilings and private decks. Town homes will have a price range of between $695,000 and $795,000.

In addition to the regular proposal, there is a supplemental proposal which bid documents specify should be considered as an overlay and does not depend on or change the principal proposal. Due to the fact that the town originally wanted to build 95 units of housing on the site, Staszko said his company is in a unique position to potentially bring that plan to fruition. He owns land which abuts the Cook Estate, which bid documents say has been tested and found capable of supporting wastewater for those additional units, as well as reserve capacity for the originally proposed 65 units.

The additional 20 units, if built, would be housed in one, 12-unit apartment building, of which 10 would be affordable housing, and eight town home units built in either duplex or triplex fashion. Bid documents specify an additional $40,000 would be paid for each supplemental unit approved, up to $800,000, for a total of up to $5.95 million.

Staszko has plans to market units to Cohasset residents first.

In addition to the proposal from Cohasset Associates, the town will have two other choices, as Northland Residential Corporation — the company the town had been working with for the past 16 months to build on the site — submitted a new offer, as did Deer Hill Partners, LLC, which is a partnership between three companies, two of which had bid separately before.

Northland Residential submitted a bid of $5 million, which would see 65 units of senior housing built on the site. There would be 45 townhouse-style condominiums and 20 mixed-income rental apartments.

The town homes would have two pricing levels and 33 would be more "upscale" with larger living areas and top-of-the-line interiors, as well as a two-car garage. There would also be 12 scaled down town homes with one-car garage s which would cost roughly $100,000 to $125,000 less than the upscale versions. Town homes could be purchased for a price of anywhere from $625,000 to $725,000.

There would be four different town home styles, ranging in size from 1,700 to 2,100 square feet. Most would feature a first-floor master suite with a walk-in shower, and an attached one- or two-car garage with direct entry to the kitchen. A second bedroom would be located on either the first or second floor, and some would have loft spaces which could serve as a hobby room or home office, or as a second more informal living room.

Residences would be arranged to have a small neighborhood feel, and the main building currently located on the site would be renovated to serve as the "village clubhouse."

There would also be rental housing and one building would house 20 apartments. Of those apartments, four would be one-bedroom market rate units, with rents of between $1,400 and $1,600 per month, and 16 would be one-bedroom affordable units with rents of between $800 and $1,253 per month.

Northland has plans to advertise units to Cohasset residents first, and the bid documents say typically, homes are offered at an attractive price at the outset, to help jump-start sales.

Deer Hill Partners, LLC — comprised of Horizon Partners, LLC, of Braintree, Black Rock Development, Inc., of Hingham, and Conroy Development Corp. of Stoughton — put in a bid of $4.9 million, which includes 56 total residential units. There would be 25 detached, single-family, market rate "carriage homes," built along the outer ridge of the property. The units would be between 1,900 and 2,400 square feet. There would also be 31 one- and two-bedroom units located in the "manor home," to be built near the circular driveway that currently exists. Of the manor home units, 17 would be market rate and 14 would be affordable. The market rate manor home units would be between 900 and 1,200 square feet and the affordable units would be between 800 and 1,100 square feet.

The affordable units would be sold for roughly $150,000 on average, and market rate units would range from roughly $420,000 for a manor house unit to $700,000 for a detached "cottage style" home along the perimeter.

There would be seven different condo styles and some would have three bedrooms while others would have two. Most would have two floors, but there would be single-floor units. Every home would have an attached two-car garage, and each home has the option of having a finished basement.

The three companies have much experience on the South Shore as Horizon Partners built the "Ridgewood Crossing," 55-plus housing development in Hingham, and Black Rock built "The Residences at Black Rock," in Hingham. Conroy has completed many building projects in the towns of Canton, Stoughton and Middleborough.

All three bid proposals are public records available for viewing at Town Hall. The board will be discussing how to proceed in the bidder selection process at its next meeting, scheduled for July 26. For more information, contact the selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105.

Flashback -After two hours of discussion, voters at the November 2003 Annual Town Meeting approved the purchase of the Cook land for $4.5 million, to be marketed to developers with the town's adjacent land, with the intention of selling the parcels together for a profit. However, problems arose with wastewater disposal and plans changed.

Northland was awarded the original bid on the project in May 2004, and soil tests conducted soon after determined wastewater from 95-units of housing - the maximum number of units the original RFP asked for - could not be handled on site and other options would need to be looked into.

Northland spent a good deal of money and put in countless man hours helping the town come up with wastewater solutions. Soil testing was done on site, holes were dug at both the South Shore Music Circus and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library to determine whether off-site leaching fields would be a possibility at either location, and the possibility of municipal sewer was also pursued. However, in the end the only alternative found was to downsize the project, as fewer units would generate a smaller amount of wastewater, which could be accommodated on site. However, with the change in scope of the project, the board of selectmen said it would be necessary to begin a new bid process pursuant to Massachusetts procurement laws.

Advertising for the new RFP, which dictates what the town would like to see built on the site — began June 15, and final bids were due July 15. The board of selectmen plans to interview bidders within the next two weeks.

the outfield, there would be enough room for a 120-foot wide and 240-foot long soccer field, which would be perfect for some of the younger players in town.

The park will also be conducive to other sports as the basketball court which currently exists will be refurbished. While Crispin said it will not be regulation size, it will be suitable for those who want to have a neighborhood game. He said there is also the possibility the court could become semi-enclosed with half-walls, to allow the court to be flooded in the winter to become a skating rink.

Currently, there are no restroom facilities at the park, which makes it very difficult for teams playing in Cohasset. Siegel, who lives next to the park, said he has had players knock on his door many times, asking if they could use his restroom. Crispin said Health Agent Joseph Godzik has indicated the soils on site could likely accommodate a small Title 5 septic system. The lavatories would be located near a new concession stand, between home plate and the dugout on the first base line, roughly where the tot lot currently stands. A leaching field for the restrooms would likely be located under the new tot lot, which due to the soil conditions may require the lot be raised a few feet.

"It could give the kids a good vantage point," Crispin quipped.

The committee has tossed around the idea of whether to seed the park or lay down sod, and has agreed it would make more sense to lay the sod, as waiting for seeds to take root will delay use of the field for another year.

"One season will be gone no matter what," said Pratt, but sod would help bring it into use more quickly.

With the anticipated increase of use, Crispin said roughly 10 to 12 parking spaces will be added at the park.

Brown said there have been almost no improvements made to the park by the town since the 1930s. He said the tot lot and the bleachers were both rebuilt years ago as Eagle Scout projects. Private donations also funded the purchase of the new flag pole. Before it was installed, the Beechwood Ballpark was the only recreational facility in Cohasset without a flag pole.

A committee is looking to make major improvements to the Beechwood Ballpark, to the tune of $500,000.

Siegel said the field is often used by the junior varsity teams and it is the worst field they play on. Brown added the infield is currently almost out to center field, due to a lack of grass. He said there are rocks in the tot lot and sometimes the chains fall off the swings, which is a real safety hazard.

While the board of selectmen was enthusiastic about the plans , its main concern was funding, as it is estimated to cost $500,000 when all is said and done. Pratt said the committee would be asking the community preservation committee to foot the bill, and would take as much of the $500,000 as it could give, and fund-raise to make up the difference.

"I don't feel as good about this as I should," said selectman Rob Spofford, adding he sees the budget troubles the town is facing and the cutting of positions town-wide and wonders how the town can spend $500,000 on a recreational facility. Although he said he thinks the park is a great idea and he fully supports the idea, he questions the logic of having CPC funds for a park, and yet not enough town funding for other budget items, like teaching positions.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer agreed and said in the context of all the town's other issues that need funding, spending that kind of money on a field may seem frivolous.

However, Pratt said the town voted to begin a Community Preservation Fund, and that is an indication residents "wanted a pool for quality of life issues which wouldn't get mixed up," with other budget items.

The board agreed to allow the committee to move forward in its quest for funding, and asked members to return with a funding update in the future.

Beechwood Ballpark overview

- Selectmen appointed a committee to look into renovating the ballpark at Beechwood Corner in 2004. Members include Merle Brown, Lynne DeGiacomo, Fay Sargent, Fred Siegel, Glenn Pratt, Jack Worley, Carl Sestito, and Lillian Curley.
- Fall 2004 Special Town Meeting approves spending $30,000 of CPC money for engineering design.
- Winter 2005, committee selects BSC group to complete the design engineering.
- May 2005, committee accepts a design which reorients the baseball diamond, relocates and rebuilds the basketball court and tot park, improves parking, constructs dugouts and stands. Plans also to incorporate drainage upgrades on Beechwood Street to accommodate the new drainage system under the field.
- Expected cost of the project $500,000 — funding options under review.

Beechwood improvements

Other improvements have been made in the Beechwood area, which makes members of the committee feel the park renovations are a natural next step.

The intricate, wrought iron gates which had stood at the entrance to the Beechwood Cemetery more than 100 years ago were found rusting in a shed on the property, and were restored to their full glory. The gates now stand proudly at the entrance to the cemetery next to a brand new sign carved to replicate typical 1870s style signage, displaying the cemetery's name. Funding for the gates and sign was provided by the community preservation committee, which allocated $20,000 to cover expenses associated with both.

The gates and sign were not the only improvements made to the cemetery. In 2001, 300 new plots were added.

In addition to the cemetery, the Cohasset Water Department has also made improvements to the water system in the area.

What is the CPC?

Under the Community Preservation Act, adopted by the town in 2002, the community preservation committee receives funding for projects from two sources, the real estate tax surcharge (in Cohasset it is 1.5 percent) and some level of matching funds from the state. State funds are derived from a roughly $20 surcharge on all documents filed in the Registry of Deeds, which mostly consists of mortgages and refinancing.

The CPC can fund project in three specific areas — open space, affordable housing, and historic preservation. Under the open space category is the recreation sub-category, which the Beechwood ballpark falls under.

Each year, 10 percent of the committee's funds are either spent or set aside for a future project, for each of its three areas of influence. All expenditures must be approved by a municipality's legislative branch, which in Cohasset's case is Town Meeting. Any project that comes before the CPC needs to have a plan for companion funds to help offset the costs as well as help stretch the CPC funds.

For anyone interested in bringing a project before the CPC, there must first be a proposal sent in writing to the committee. If the idea is thought to be feasible by the committee, a time will be set up for a more formal presentation to be made.

On the field or on the stage, Teddie Straughn does it all

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

In your travels around Cohasset this summer, if you see a badminton game, don't be surprised if Teddie Straughn is involved.

Apparently, that is the only sport he hasn't tried.

A three-sport athlete (football, hockey, baseball) at Cohasset High School, Straughn has competitively played just about everything else at one time or another. He was on the local swim team when he was younger, played basketball until the eighth grade, and has dabbled in soccer and lacrosse.

It is all part of Straughn's enthusiasm for sport and competition.

"If I'm not active, I'm not the happiest camper," Straughn said with his trademark smile that almost never disappears from his face.

Straughn's willingness to try new things, however, is not limited to athletics. He and good friend Crandon Leahy decided last fall to give acting a shot, as both tried out for the school's stage production of "Grease."

Figuring he was just going to get a bit part as an extra in the background, Straughn wound up earning the lead role of Danny Zuko. Not bad for a young man with little experience in that field.

"That's just how I am," Straughn says of his penchant for doing something different. "I heard about the play and I figured, 'I'll do that. Why not?'"

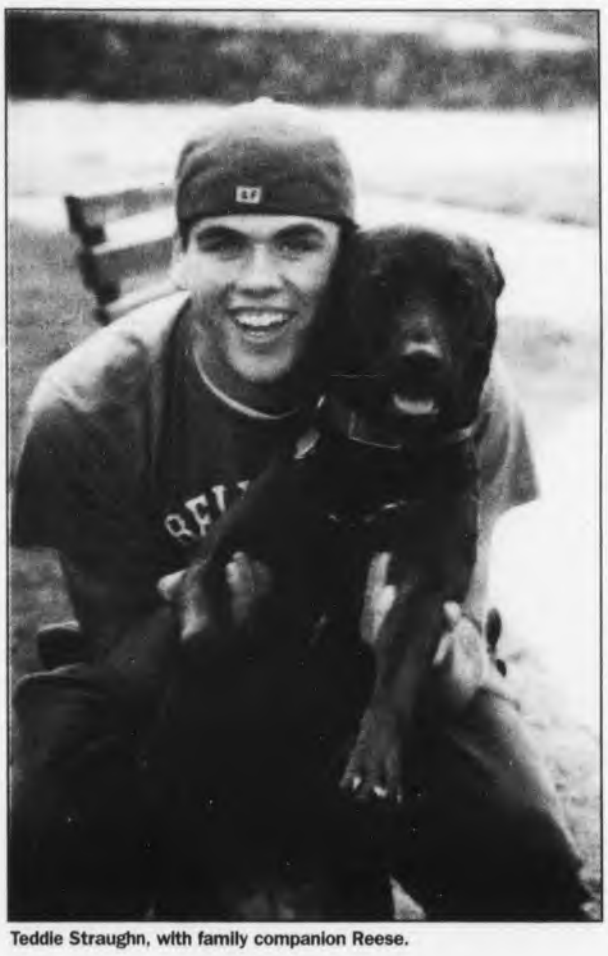
Of course, between practice and film study, Straughn was already putting in over three hours a day into his role as starting fullback and linebacker for the South Shore League champion football team. After that, it was on to play rehearsal for another couple hours.

Such a high level of participation in school activities is par for the course, says Cohasset football head coach Tony Rolfe.

"Teddie had a great all-around appreciation of the school," says Rolfe, a history teacher at the school. "He took advantage of a lot of things that Cohasset High School had to offer."

Straughn says he greatly enjoyed his experience as an actor, and hopes it will not be his last.

"I have a feeling I might try to do something else [on stage]," says Straughn, who will be taking an introductory theatre course at Boston College in the fall. "I had a blast doing Grease. If I could fit it in, I'd love to do something else."



Make no mistake, however: baseball is Straughn's primary passion.

The 6-foot-2, 200-pound right-hander will be plying his wares on the mound at BC, where he will step into a program that won the Big East championship this season. Next season, the Eagles will be playing in the Athletic Coast Conference, where they will be playing southern powerhouses like Miami, Virginia Tech and North Carolina.

Straughn will have his work cut out for him to get playing time for a team that had five players taken in last month's Major League Baseball draft, but it is something he is looking forward to with a lot of enthusiasm.

"I've been thinking about fall ball a lot; it will be nice to just focus on pitching all year," said Straughn, who features a mid- to high-80s fastball and strong curveball. "I love baseball."

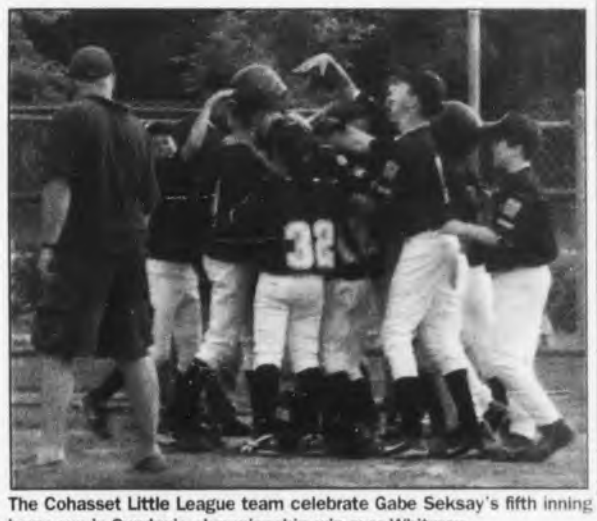
Little Leaguers win first ever district title, advance to state tourney

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

A memorable ride for a memorable bunch continues.

The Cohasset Little League team made history Sunday night in Sharon, defeating Whitman 10-3 and winning the town's first ever district championship. The team moves on to play this weekend in a four-team, double elimination tournament that started yesterday at Hollingsworth Field in Braintree.



That competition features four of the 16 district champions, all split into four separate four-team tournaments. Those four winners will meet in another double elimination tourney the following weekend to determine the Massachusetts champion, who will advance to the Northeast regional, the winner of which plays in the Little League World Series.

Sunday's victory was a well-rounded effort. Home runs from Robert Jones, Jeff Cavanaro and Gabe Seksay led the offense, while Cavanaro - the new media darling of Cohasset - took care of business on the mound.

Jones and Cavanaro, the team's three-hole and cleanup hitters respectively, set the tone early with back-to-back homers in the bottom of the first. Cavanaro made that stand through four innings by posting four zeroes on the scoreboard.

Cohasset put the game away in the bottom of the fourth with

Locals stand out at Bay State Games

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

Cohasset's Meg Anderson had herself a busy day of tennis on Sunday.

The Cohasset High School sophomore had a Gold medal match in the 16-year old girls division against Lynnfield's Lindsey Buchinin - and won.

A couple hours later, she teamed up with classmate Sally Meehan for the Gold medal doubles match - and won.

The Mariner All-Scholastic duo have been tearing it up on the local tennis circuit over the last few months. They advanced to the South sectional semi-final in the MIAA state individuals tournament, losing to the eventual champions.

Anderson and Meehan were lights out down the stretch and into the state team tournament for the Skippers, going undefeated as a team in that time. And now, they are Bay State Games gold medalists.

In the 14-year old division last year, they took the bronze.

Another familiar face, Joe Kehoe, fared well at the Games also. The recent CHS graduate took sixth place in the open wrestling division, for the 162-pound weight class.

Kehoe has been a star on the grappling scene for the high school, winning state championships the last two years and advancing to the All-State finals last winter.

Mariner All-Scholastic softball team

Casey Anderson and Christina Pinkus have been named to our All-Scholastic softball team.

Both were instrumental in the Skippers' first state tournament berth in the program's three-year history. For Anderson, it is her fourth appearance on our All-Scholastic teams: two for basketball, and now two for softball.

Pinkus, meanwhile, is the only sophomore to make the team. Likewise, she was the only 10th grader to make the South Shore League All-Star team.

Athletes are chosen from the 13 towns covered in Marinerland: Abington, Braintree, Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Holbrook, Kingston (Silver Lake HS), Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Rockland, Scituate and Weymouth.

Casey Anderson - Senior (Capt.)
Catcher - Cohasset

Casey Anderson

One of Cohasset's best all-around athletes ended her high school athletic career in style, helping lead the Skippers to the state tournament with seven straight wins to end the regular season…After batting .361 last year, hit .365 in her senior campaign…Second on the team with 16 RBI, batting either fourth or fifth all season…Also had 10 walks in 19 games, giving her an on-base percentage of nearly .500…South Shore League All-Star once again this season…Solid behind the plate, as opposing runners rarely stole bases…Lauded by her coach for working well with new pitchers in her first two seasons…Also a two-time Mariner All-Scholastic in basketball…Will continue her basketball career at Roger Williams University in Bristol, R.I…Plans to study education or psychology…Cohasset coach Deb Bostwick: "Casey was one of the founders in starting the softball program three years ago. She was just an unbelievable person to help get the program going. She's an all-around great kid, and for her to graduate this year is tough for our program."

Christina Pinkus - Sophomore
Pitcher - Cohasset

Established herself as one of the top young softball players in the South Shore League, and was named a league All-Star…The only sophomore to earn that honor…A talented left-handed pitcher who can also mash at the plate…In 84 innings of work, allowed only 64 hits and racked up 125 strikeouts…Had 17 K's in an April game against Mashpee…Pitched and won both ends of a doubleheader against Nantucket and Sacred Heart that clinched a playoff spot for Cohasset, striking out 13 in the first game and 12 in the second. Offensive numbers also staggering: .490 batting average, three home runs, eight doubles, four triples, 26 RBI and 25 walks…That makes for a .662 on base percentage and even 1.000 slugging percentage…Plays first base when she's not on the mound…Missed a part of last year after breaking her hand in a play at the plate against Carver…Currently playing AAU softball for the South Coast Storm, who finished second in a regional tournament two weekends ago…Also plays soccer for CHS…Aspires to play softball in college…Cousin of former Mariner softball All-Scholastic and CHS grad Danielle Pinkus…Cohasset coach Deb Bostwick: "This year, having Christina back at full tilt was awesome. She plays with heart and soul, and her pitching ability is just remarkable."

Christina Pinkus

AnnMarie Murphy - Senior (Capt.)
Pitcher - Abington

A standout pitcher since her freshman season, Murphy capped her stellar AHS career with yet another solid campaign…Sharing duties on the hill with teammate Michelle Franey, Murphy still went 15-2 on the season with a 1.26 ERA…A hard thrower, opposing hitters could rarely keep up with Murphy's fastball, striking out 105 batters in the process…The three-time South Shore League All-star stepped up her hitting game in her final high school season and finished the year with a .538 average from the No. 6 spot in the order…Also drove in 25 runs and hit a homerun in a game against Case that broke the contest wide open…Murphy's performance on the mound and at the plate led the Green Wave to yet another SSL title as she was part of a group that had not lost a league game in their entire AHS careers…At 19-2, Abington reached the quarterfinals of the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney where it fell to eventual winners, Cardinal Spellman…Also a cross country runner and vice president of her 2005 class, Murphy plans to continue her softball career at Wheaton College. Abington coach Steve Kingman: "The last four weeks of the season, Reba (Murphy's knickname) was a force at the plate. On the mound, she took on all the big teams and was always very poised and composed."

Michelle Franey - Junior
Second baseman - Abington

It was a breakout season for this talented infielder and pitcher…The two-year starter led the Abington team and the South Shore League in hitting this season with a .563 average from the No. 5 spot in the order…Also drove in 26 runs and was the team leader in doubles and triples…At second base, Franey only added to the depth of the Green Wave's highly regarded defense…When not at second, Franey was the team's No. 2 starter and pitched to five decisions this season, going 4-1 with a 1.12 ERA…The SSL All-star has already tossed a pair of no-hitters in her career…As for next season, Franey's coach said she could be moved over to shortstop to fill a void there, while also doing some pitching on what will again be another talent-loaded Abington squad…Also a talented soccer and basketball player at AHS, Franey will return to all three teams next year. Abington coach Steve Kingman: "Michelle was a force offensively and she's an outstanding infielder. She can pitch, catch, play defense. I wish I had two of her."

Emily Bularzik - Sr. (Capt.)
Pitcher - Braintree

Another great year for the now three-time Marinerland All-Scholastic…A first team Bay State Conference All-Star, also for the third straight year…Named Most Valuable Player of the Carey Division, as voted by league coaches…Numbers speak for themselves: 16-3 record, 0.61 ERA, three walks (yes, three) in 138 innings…This on the heels of a 2004 campaign that saw her go 14-4 with a 0.97 ERA, with three walks in 123 innings…Saved her best for the first round of this year's state tournament: Matched up against Whitman-Hanson star pitcher Lisa de la Campa, Bularzik tossed a perfect game in a 2-0 Braintree victory…Fields her position very well and hit over .350 from the three-spot in the lineup…Not the hardest thrower, but changes speeds very effectively and hits her spots on both sides of the plate…Has the mind to match her talent; Bularzik was the BHS Class of '05 valedictorian…Heading to Amherst College this fall…Braintree coach Mike Goldman: "Emily just wants to play; she lives softball. Every day she pitched, she was like a kid on Christmas. Emily was a great team leader in every sense of the word."

Merry MacDonald - Jr.
Third base - Braintree

Bay State Conference pitchers are not looking forward to the prospect of pitching to MacDonald for another season…A first team league All-Star once again this season…Hit a team-best .464 from her leadoff spot this year…Also led the team with 39 hits (in 22 games) and four homers…Stole 28 bases this year, and has been caught stealing just once over the last two years…Nearly flawless in the field, exhibiting quick hands and a strong, accurate arm…A remarkable all-around athlete whose appearances on our All-Scholastic teams are becoming a regular thing: MacDonald has made the volleyball and softball teams for the last two years…Don't be surprised to see her on the basketball team next year as well…A top-notch student also…Braintree coach Mike Goldman: "Merry has as much raw talent as anyone out there. Her combination of hitting and defense make her quite a prospect for the future."

Lucia Reed - Sr. (Capt.)
Center field - Braintree

Makes her second straight Marinerland All-Scholastic team…One of the area's top all-around players, and a second team Bay State Conference All-Star…Batted .342 from her cleanup spot in the lineup, after hitting .343 last year…Also led the team with 21 RBI…An outstanding defensive presence in the middle of the outfield…Has excellent range and a knack for coming up with great catches…A solid athlete, also co-captained the soccer team in the fall and was the starting point guard for a basketball team that went to the Div. 1 South semifinals…An Honorable Mention All-Scholastic for basketball in the winter…Won the Women's Coaches Award, given to the top senior female athlete at Braintree High School…Will be attending Union College in upstate New York in the fall…Braintree coach Mike Goldman: "Lucia was a very good hitter and just a tremendous center fielder. She covered all kinds of ground, and has a strong arm."

Lindsey Arria - Senior (Capt.)
Shortstop - Hanover

After a knee injury sidelined her for the latter half of the season last year, Arria came out on all cylinders this year…The four-year starter and Patriot League All-star shortstop hit .604 from the leadoff spot and scored 42 runs for the Patriot League Champion Lady Indians (13-0, 20-2 overall)…Arria had a knack for getting on base and knowing what to do when there…Speed and quickness resulted in her team-leading 27 stolen bases and her patience at the plate helped her acquire an incredible .842 on-base percentage…About as smooth as one can get at shortstop, Arria's defense was nearly flawless…In her four year career, Arria made only six errors at the position…Career totals at the plate find her with a .489 average and 87 thefts…A four-year starter and PL All-star on both the HHS soccer and basketball teams, Arria plans to continue her softball career at Providence College. Hanover coach Matt Plummer: "Lindsey can get to any ball and has tremendous range. She was the communicator in the infield. All four kids always knew what they were supposed to be doing. She's an excellent leader and an incredible talent."

Kelly Downs - Junior
Catcher - Hanover

It could be said that pitchers are only as good as the people who catch them, especially in the case of Downs…The Patriot League All-star worked extremely well with ace Ashley Messina and was one of the best catchers in the league…Threw out 6-of-8 base runners attempting to steal, including one of the fastest base runners in the state from Coyle-Cassidy…At the plate, Downs lived up to her role in the cleanup spot, hitting .516, smashing four doubles, a triple and two home-runs…Also drove in 26 runs…A three-year starter who played centerfield behind catcher Caroline King her freshman season, Downs helped guide the Lady Indians to their third-straight PL title (13-0) and to the quarterfinals of the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney…There, Downs registered the only two Hanover hits off Coyle-Cassidy's hard-throwing starter…Downs also plays field hockey at HHS and will return to both fields next fall. Hanover coach Matt Plummer: "People rarely tried to steal against her because most weren't successful. That girl from Coyle was fast as lightening and Kelly threw her out."

Ashley Messina - Junior
Pitcher - Hanover

As the ace of the Hanover squad, Messina was about as clutch as one can get…The talented junior hurler went 18-2 on the season with a near untouchable 0.72 ERA…Not an overpowering pitcher, it was Messina's impeccable control and mixing of pitches that made her so effective…In 145 innings pitched this season, Messina walked only six batters while striking out 118…Had a strong fastball, but it was her off-speed stuff that gave opposing hitters big headaches…Her performance on the hill helped Hanover win the Patriot League title for the third-straight season (13-0) and carried the Lady Indians into the quarterfinals of the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney…A year round player, Messina has been involved with the sport since her elementary school days…A PL All-star for the second-straight season, Messina will return to the HHS softball diamond next spring. Hanover coach Matt Plummer: "Ashley is like a machine as far as accuracy. No, she's more accurate than a machine."

Kristina Lowe - Senior
Catcher - Holbrook

The lone senior on a Bulldogs squad that made the playoffs once again, despite a very inexperienced lineup…Hit over .400 from the clean-up spot…Her skills behind the plate were crucial for Holbrook…Threw out 10 runners trying to steal second…Allowed few past balls…Coach Susan Fontecchio: "She has more character than almost any player I've coaches in more than 35 years."

Jean McIntyre - Junior
Catcher - Marshfield

This multi-talented player was an offensive standout on a team that struggled a bit with consistency…McIntyre led not only her own Marshfield team, but also the Old Colony League in hitting with a .484 average from the leadoff spot…The OCL All-star drove in 13 runs and scored 19 of her own, guiding the Lady Rams to a 10-9 season and berth in the Div. I South Sectional tourney…There weren't many opposing teams that could keep this smart, speedy player off base as she reached safely in 19 of 20 games played this season…A three-year varsity player, McIntyre was cited by her coach as being a master of the bunt, a major reason why her on-base percentage was so high…Also a talented volleyball player at MHS, McIntyre will return to both teams next fall. Marshfield coach Kathy O'Donnell: "Whatever you asked Jean to do, she'd do it. She also did whatever she could to get on base. There was only one game this season in which she didn't get on base. That's unbelievable."

Caitlin Flaherty, - Junior
Catcher - Pembroke

The heart and soul of a squad that made the playoffs in its first year off existence…Patriot League all-star finished the season batting .409 out of the cleanup spot with one home run, 18 RBI and 21 runs scored…Her right-handed cannon made opponents think twice about challenging her on the base paths…Can break down a game like a coach…Writes a popular weekly sports column in the Pembroke Mariner…Coach Tony Pina: "I've been coaching baseball and softball for 13 years and I've never met a player who has been the complete package like Caitlin Flaherty."

Crissa Morton - Junior
Catcher - Rockland

A two-year starter for the Rockland team, Morton is making her first appearance on the Mariner All-Scholastic team…This power-hitting catcher was among the leading hitters on the Lady Bulldogs' squad with a .397 average, earning her a spot on the Patriot League All-star team…Behind the plate, Morton caught a pair of pitchers, called the plays in the infield, and committed only a pair of throwing errors in 22 games…Her play on all area's of the field helped the Lady Bulldogs record a respectable 11-9 overall season, while going 8-6 in the challenging PL…Guided the squad to a victory in the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney with a comeback win over Plymouth North in the preliminary round…Morton plays softball year round and will return to the RHS team next spring.

Local gymnasts excel in spring competitions

Four young gymnasts from Cohasset and Hingham were among the top finishers at a spring AAU qualifier at Paramount Gymnastics in Swansea.

The performances of Cohasset's Amber Silvia and Paige Desisto, along with Hingham's Grace Barlow and Hannah Black, earned all of them spots at the regional finals on May 21.

At the qualifier, Amber took first place in the 8-11 age group on the floor exercise with a score of 8.80. She also finished third on the bars (8.20) and had a strong all-around score of 32.65. In the 12-13 age group, Paige finished fourth on the floor (8.70) and beam (8.4), while taking sixth with an all-around score of 32.50.

In that same group, Grace was second with a remarkable beam performance (9.0), propelling her to a fifth place finish in the all-around (33.00). At the 14-15 age group, Hannah earned top marks across the board: second on floor (8.80), third on bars and vault (both 8.10), sixth on beam (8.30) and third in the all-around (33.30).

At the Region 6 competition in May - which draws the top gymnasts from Massachusetts and Rhode Island - all four continued their solid scores. Hannah was third on the bars (8.8) and fifth on beam (8.75), leading her to fifth place in all-around with a 34.45.

Paige had a couple top-10 finishes on the beam and bars. Amber scored an 8.1 or higher in all four events, and Grace did the same on three out of four.

It looks like Amber and Paige are following in the footsteps of CHS gymnasts Kate Carpenter, Lisa Spirito and Nancy Durkin.

Straughn says some of his favorite baseball memories come from his Little League days, along with AAU ball (from ages 13-15) and his experience as a 16-year old with the South Shore Seadogs. It was with that team, under the tutelage of coach Rick Delvecchio, that Straughn really blossomed as a pitcher, perfecting his curve to the point that he felt comfortable throwing it in any count.

That summer, the Seadogs spent three weeks in Georgia, playing against other All-Star teams that featured some of the best young baseball talent in the country.

"That summer was the best I ever pitched," Straughn says. "The experience with that team was just awesome. I had a lot of friends from the Spartans (his AAU team) there, and if we weren't playing, we would go down to the fields just to watch a game."

Straughn credits much of his success to his parents, Eddie and Christine, who have always worked around their busy work schedules to watch their son play, as well as his grandfather, John Power, a former pitcher with whom Straughn constantly consults for advice.

In fact, just about all of Straughn's starts on the mound bring his own cheering section of family and friends.

"That's my inspiration right there," he says. "They're all supportive, and they're probably the loudest people ever."

Straughn's high school baseball coach, Al Gallotta, believes the recent CHS graduate will excel at BC.

"He'll fit right in there. He just has great character and a dynamic personality," Gallotta says. "He'll be the type of kid who, even as a freshman, the juniors and seniors will see him as a cool kid."

All of Straughn's high school coaches, including hockey coach Ben Virga, had praise for his leadership skills, particularly in guiding his younger teammates and making them feel as equal parts of the team.

"Teddie was just a consummate captain," Virga says. "He's a very mature and very thoughtful person. He's probably more mature than 90 percent of the adults involved in high school sports, that's for sure."

Of course, playing baseball year-round means Straughn will have to give up the other sports on a competitive basis, and he says he will miss hockey the most.

Teddie is the third of four Straughn children, all multi-sport athletes in high school. Sister Kelly, the oldest of the four, played softball and field hockey. Brothers Timmy - now a senior at UMass-Amherst - and Brian, now a senior at CHS, both also play hockey and baseball.

Among Teddie's fondest memories from the rinks came as a freshman, where he played with Timmy. This past season, Teddie was in the older brother role, playing on the first line with Brian.

"Playing alongside my brother was awesome," Teddie says. "He was the goal scorer and I just set him up. Being brothers, we just always knew where the other one was going to be."

In addition to appreciating Straughn's pure hockey skills, Virga readily acknowledges his sacrifices for the team. The third-year coach says Straughn would volunteer to play defense or give up ice time to the younger players, and was never concerned about his personal statistics.

That, according to Virga, is all just a part of Straughn's nature.

And in terms of Straughn's future, Virga may have said it best.

"I don't think there's anything that Teddie can't accomplish if he wants it," he said. "I would be shocked if the word 'failure' and Teddie Straughn are ever used in the same sentence."

As for what that future holds, Straughn says his ultimate goal is to be drafted by a Major League team. If that doesn't work out, however, this happy-go-lucky guy will surely find something.

"When the time comes, I'll figure it out and I'll be happy," Straughn says.

Teddie Straughn had a solid season at the plate for his Cohasset Legion team, including a 3-for-3 performance in the season finale.

a seven-run, nine-hit explosion. Jones' two-run double highlighted the inning, and was part of a string of five straight hits from Mike Monaco, Anders Goetz, Ben Campbell, Jones and Cavanaro. Robbie Hill had an RBI double, and Seksay knocked in a run with a single to center during the inning.

Seksay put the proverbial exclamation point on the proceedings with a solo homer in the fifth, a bomb over the fence in center field.

Cavanaro allowed two runs in the fifth and one in the sixth, but pitched out of further trouble in those innings with a couple strikeouts in each. The pitcher earned the praise of Cohasset manager Joe Campbell.

"He's very competitive, very smart and extremely focused," said Campbell, who deserves his share of credit for leading this group of talented players. "He just doesn't get rattled out there."

Nor do his teammates; as any of the coaches or parents will tell you, this is one loose, fun-loving group of ballplayers. And the ride continues.

U-12 softball off to strong start

The Cohasset 12-and-under girls softball travel team has reached the halfway point of the summer season with a fine 4-1 record in South Shore League play.

The Blue & White started the season in true "Cardiac Kid" fashion by pulling out a pair of thrilling, come-from-behind victories in the last inning. Carly "Clutch" Martin provided the game-winning hits in both of the triumphs.

In a 14-13 win over Duxbury in the season-opener against a powerful opposing pitcher, Martin fell behind on the count after fouling off a string of pitches into the first base dugout. However, on a 1-2 pitch Carly drilled a clean hit into the hole between first and second to bring in the tying and winning runs before an appreciative hometown crowd at Freedom Field.

A few nights later against Bridgewater, Martin duplicated her heroic efforts with a base hit to score the winning run in a 13-12 Cohasset triumph. Also playing key roles in the winning rallies were Claire Pozniak, who scored the tying and winning runs respectively in each game, and the Blue & White's version of the Red Sox Ramirez-Ortiz combo, hard-hitting Lindsay Davis (.444 batting average and .687 on base percentage) and Carli Haggerty (.600 BA and .777 OBP), both of whom set the table ahead of Martin (.500 BA and .733 OBP) to keep the rallies alive.

After a loss to perennial South Shore power Abington, the Cohasset girls bounced back with two solid wins over Scituate, 17-8, and Norwell, 18-8, to raise their record to 4-1, good for second place in the 11-team league. The fast start also all but assures the girls of a post-season playoff berth.

A variety of pitchers have contributed to the girls' success to this point. Carli Haggerty was the winning pitcher in the first two games, with Christie Fitzgerald earning the W against Scituate and Logan Pratt doing the same against Norwell.

Offensively, Emma Quigley leads the team in hits with nine, batting average (.900), and on-base percentage (.928). Emma also is the only Blue & White player to have played all five games without having struck out and without having made an error in the field.

Next on the hit parade are Kerry McCabe with seven hits and a sterling .636 BA (.666 OBP); Logan Pratt and Claire Pozniak with six hits apiece and batting averages of .545; and Christie Fitzgerald with five hits, an .833 BA and .916 OBP (both second best on the team), and no strikeouts.

Other members of the team who have made solid contributions include Caitlyn Sullivan (.666 OBP), Colby Smalzel (.400 BA, .700 OBP, and no strikeouts), Sara Mavilia (.300 OBP), Brittany Pinkus (.444 OBP), Michaela Brophy (.538 OBP), and Callie Altholtz.

According to the coaching staff, "Our team's success is a direct result of the strength of our in-town softball program. The strong interest in softball this past season and the improvement year-to-year of our girls is a tribute to the hard work of people like Bob Spofford, Matt Salerno, and many others who have worked tirelessly to make softball a success in Cohasset. Our Freedom Field complex is the envy of every visiting coach and will serve us well into the future."

Although the rest of the regular season will be challenging because of family vacations and a tough second-half schedule against the iron of the South Shore League, the Blue & White girls will be looking forward to the upcoming Duxbury tournament on the weekend of August 5-7 and the league playoffs which will start August 8.

OBITUARIES

Herbert L. Jason

Commercial lobsterman for more than 70 years

Herbert L. Jason, 91, of Cohasset, died July 14, 2005, at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth.

He served in the U.S. Coast Guard Temporary Reserve during World War II, patrolling the coastline and ships in Boston Harbor, and worked as a coppersmith and pipefitter for various shipyards including Fore River, Hingham and Portsmouth.

A past Deputy Harbormaster for the town of Cohasset, Mr. Jason was a commercial lobsterman for over 70 years, until his health forced him to retire. He was a life member of the South Shore Lobsterman's Association, and a past member and delegate of the Massachusetts Lobsterman's Association. He was also a scuba diver, and had recovered many artifacts from numerous shipwrecks in the area.

Mr. Jason was dedicated to preserving Cohasset maritime history and that of Minot Ledge Lighthouse. He used his talents as a coppersmith to build the copper dome on the Minot Light replica in Cohasset. He also designed and built a memorial to the Keepers of the first Minot Light, who perished when the lighthouse was destroyed in 1851. For many years, he collected donations for Toys for Tots at the former Bradlee's department store in Hingham.

A member of the Massachusetts 4x4 Association and the Connecti-6 Rods Auto Club, he enjoyed attending auto shows around New England with his grandson and received many awards for engineering a custom truck he and his grandson had built together.

Husband of the late Grace M. (Silvia) Jason, he leaves two daughters, Doris Small, and Heather Dauphinee, both of Scituate; three grandsons, John, Gregory, and Robert Small of Scituate; a brother, Kenneth R. Jason of Cohasset.

A funeral Mass was held at St. Anthony Church in Cohasset. Interment is in Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to Town of Cohasset, Governor's Island Anchor Fund, c/o Town Hall, Cohasset, MA 02025.

Memory of Jason will burn bright

dation from the Department of Transportation and U.S. Coast Guard, as well as a Massachusetts Senate resolution from state Sen. Robert Hedlund, and resolutions from the state and town.

"It was something he always wanted to do his entire life," Small said, adding he was glad to have had the opportunity to help his grandfather bring the dream to life.

"He was really happy to get that done," Small said.

But while Small was happy to help his grandfather with his plans, his grandfather was just as happy to return the favor when Small came up with an idea to place a memorial anchor on Government Island by the sailing club. Small said currently, the anchor project is still in the works.

"He didn't get to see the finished product," said Small, but he had a great deal of input in the project. Small said the project will be completed in Jason's honor.

Perhaps the reason Jason spent much of his time preserving the town's maritime history is because he was a large part of it. Born on Feb. 12, 1914, Jason lived his entire life in Cohasset, and much of it was spent on the water. By the age of 15, he was rowing to sea and lobstering, using his own handcrafted traps. Jason took after his grandfather, who sailed the world on whaling ships.

When he was a little older, Jason became the captain of a lobster boat, an occupation he held for roughly 70 years. Jason knew the harbor inside and out, and Small said years ago, when a yacht caught fire out at sea, Jason came to the rescue and saved everyone on board.

Small said his grandfather loved his job, and was sad to give it up when he was 85 years old.

"He would have been fishing right up to now," said Small. "He always wanted to get back out onto the water."

Jason was a life member of the South Shore Lobstermen's Association, and a past member and delegate in the Mass. Lobstermen's Association.

But Jason's sailing experience wasn't limited to lobster boats. He temporarily served in the United States Coast Guard during World War II, patrolling the coastline and ships in Boston Harbor. He was also deputy harbormaster in Cohasset, and would also take boats out to go scuba diving. Jason recovered many artifacts from numerous shipwrecks in the area during dives.

In the winter, Small said Jason worked in various shipyards, including the Fore River Shipyard, Hingham Shipyard, and Portsmouth Shipyard in New Hampshire. He served as a pipefitter and coppersmith — skills that came in handy years later when working on the Minot Light replica.

But Small said longtime Cohasset residents might remember another winter activity of Jason's — when he would race across Lily Pond on his "ice sled," which he had outfitted with an engine and airplane propeller.

With Jason's flair for engineering and design, he and Small had a leg up on the competition when it came to presenting their 1977 Ford pickup truck at car shows — a passion the two shared. Together, the two spent hours refurbishing their 4-wheel drive pickup truck, getting it ready for competitions all over the U.S.

"We went to Vermont, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Ohio," said Small, adding Jason designed many of the custom parts on the truck, including the one-of-a-kind trailer made from the back end of another truck. The trailer has its own fuel tank, and when the truck runs out of gas, it can fill itself up from the gas in the trailer while the truck is in motion.

"He wanted something different," Small said of his grandfather, adding the two had seen a television show about airplanes that could refill their engines while in flight, and Jason made a similar system for their truck.

"We took a lot of awards for that," he said, adding the total is probably up around 150. "We did alright."

In addition, Jason removed the original gas engine and replaced it with a Japanese diesel engine which greatly improved gas mileage. That enabled the two to keep their fuel costs down when driving to shows far away, including as far as Utah. Small said at that show, there was a television crew which took one look at their truck and knew it had to be on television. The program aired on TNN.

"I still have the truck," Small said, although it has some wear and tear from making so many trips. Small has taken it off the road for now to help preserve it.

In addition to all the contributions he made to his own community, for many years, Jason collected donations for the Toys for Tots program, run by the United States Marines, in Hingham. In light of his all-around volunteerism, Jason was nominated many times to be the Cohasset Mariner Citizen of the Year.

There is no way Jason's impact on the town can ever be measured, but in May 1996, the town paid him great homage, as he, along with Herb Towle, were celebrated during "Herb Day." While Jason was honored for his work on the Minot's Light Replica and granite monument, Towle, who passed away in 2003, was recognized for his renovations to the Lightkeepers Residence.

Cohasset resident Joe McElroy, who worked closely with Towle on the Lightkeeper's renovations, said during that time, he came to know Jason well, as both men spent much time on Government Island.

"He was always looking forward, not backwards," said McElroy, adding he was greatly impressed with Jason's maritime knowledge and creative thinking. "He threw himself into everything he did," no matter what the task, he said.

"The outpouring of affection for him on Herb Day is eloquent testimony to the fact that he will be sorely missed."

To help support the anchor project Herbert Jason and his grandson John Small began together, donations may be made in Jason's memory to the Town of Cohasset's Government Island Anchor Fund, c/o Town Hall, 41 Highland Avenue.

Bellevue Cadillac

Bellevue Cadillac pulls into the Den

With Bellevue Cadillac's music being heard in television shows like "The Sopranos," "Sex and the City," and "Las Vegas," it is no surprise that the group has made a name for itself as one of the "swingingest" big bands around. Since being formed in 1991 by songwriter Doug Bells of Hull, the group has gone from a local favorite known for its song list of only original music to a band that tours nationally and internationally.

Next month, the group will make history as the first American swing band to perform in Moscow's Red Square as part of a music festival that will also feature bands from Ireland, India and Africa. Before leaving for Russia, however, Bellevue Cadillac will make an "unplugged" appearance on Friday at the Den at the Fox & Hound Wood Grille and Tavern in Quincy.

"For the Den, we're going to strip it down to what swing bands became after the war, with just three or four pieces. We'll have a double bass, a cocktail set of drums, piano and guitar," explained Bells recently. "Our fans will hear our stuff like they have never heard it before. They'll also hear music we don't usually do. People have long told us that while they love the craziness of our big live shows, they also really wanted to hear our songs in different settings like the Den."

Bells, known as "The Professor" in the band, is not only the group's songwriter, but also a vocalist who plays piano, guitar and ukulele. He founded Bellevue Cadillac after spending many years as an executive with Wurlitzer Music and dabbling in real estate.

"After a financial downturn in the late 1980s, I decided to dust off my guitar. I hadn't been listening too much to what was on the radio, however, so I opted to write music based on my own personal experiences and also based on the myriad musical influences in my life. I try very hard to write classics. There ain't no throwaways in the lot. The song-writing is very important to me. I write everything as if it were meant to be a single."

"Bellevue Cadillac Unplugged" will be at the Den at the Fox & Hound Wood Grille and Tavern, 123 Sea Street, Quincy, Friday, July 22 at 9 p.m. For more information, call 617-786-7469 or visit www.jmproductionspresents.com

LISTEN To Life

THE INTELLIGENT HEARING INSTRUMENT

Science fiction has long been interested in artificial intelligence, which is the application of intuitive behavior to machines. Today, digital technology has largely made this dream a reality with the introduction of a hearing instrument that mimics the brain's ability to instantly identify and focus on sounds that a person wants to hear. Advanced microprocessing technology enables the hearing instrument to analyze and adapt itself to sounds in various listening conditions. As a result, the hearing instrument offers its user an optimum balance of amplification and noise suppression, based on the wearer's personal preferences. This sound adaptation occurs automatically, intuitively, and seamlessly to enhance hearing. The wearer can, thus, have a better hearing experience in challenging listening environments.

At FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, one of our most important jobs is keeping up to date on the latest technological advances in hearing instruments. If a hearing test reveals that a hearing aid will be of benefit to you, let us help in the selection of the one that's right for you and your lifestyle. To ensure the most appropriate match between hearing aid and wearer, we carry a full range of instruments from which to choose. Our testing equipment is state-of-the-art, and we welcome you and anyone in your family to come see us at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, for a free hearing evaluation. PH: 781-337-1144. We also have an office in Abington.

P.S. At the heart of an intelligent hearing instrument is voice priority processing, which prioritizes the amplification of the human voice over other sounds in the listening environment.

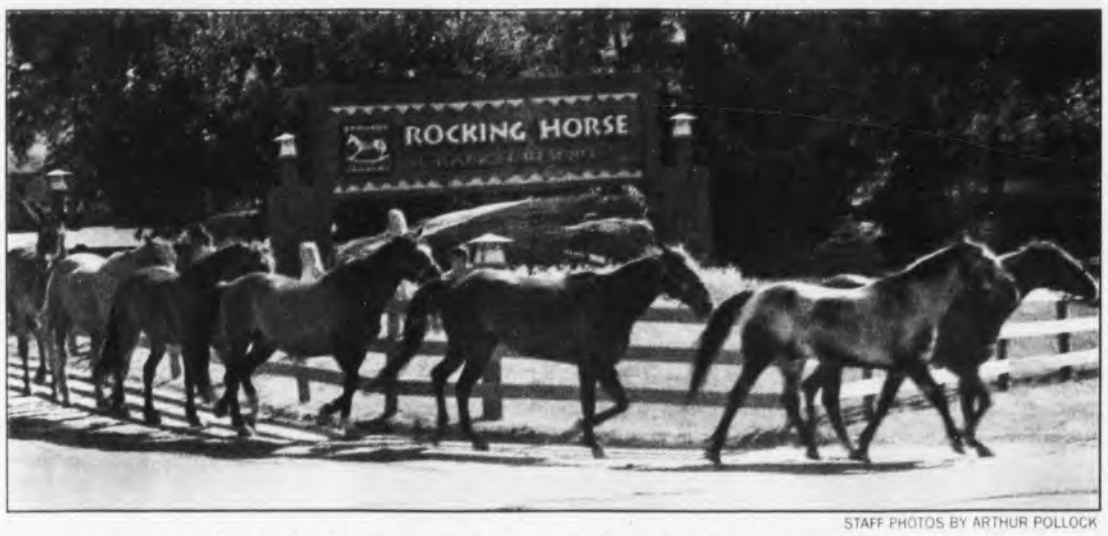
Yee-haw, dude

Get your spurs a-jangling at New York horse ranch

By ARTHUR POLLOCK

HIGHLAND, N.Y. – At 4:30 p.m., it's time for "the turnout," the evening event when the horses at Rocking Horse Ranch are sent to pasture after being ridden all day. Guests line up behind the fence, eager to take in the sight. It was one of the highlights of my family's recent stay, too. We watched as traffic stopped to let dozens of quarter horses trot across the road to rest for the night. Better than a parade!

We had come to Rocking Horse Ranch Resort, a popular all-inclusive located in this town in the lush, rolling hills of the mid-Hudson Valley, because our 6-year-old daughter loves horses.



Plus, unlike the western dude ranches, this lakeside ranch is less than a four-hour ride from Boston. Note to speeders: New York State troopers are not very sympathetic to out-of-state drivers. I could not talk my way out of a ticket despite it being Father's Day with an adorable child in the car to boot.

The ranch was started in 1958 by Nathan Turk, who grew up on New York's Lower East Side. As a young boy, Turk fell in love with a local iceman's horse. Years later he bought a tattered hotel here in what was a town frequented by such gangsters of the day as Dutch Schultz and Legs Diamond. He slowly turned the property into one of the nation's largest dude ranches, on 500 acres with more than 100 horses. More than 125,000 guests from all over the country visit each year.

As soon as we arrived my daughter hopped out of the car and made a dash for the stables, managing to get in a ride before we had even unpacked our bags.

Beginners can take a leisurely 45-minute trail walk, supervised by several watchful wranglers. More advanced riders are allowed to trot or cantor on their trail rides.

Every visitor is guaranteed at least one ride per day but because there are five ride times each day, those who want to can spend many hours on the pretty wooded trails. Unfortunately, I was not one of them, since my daughter banned me from riding with her after my rather frisky horse bumped into her horse's rear end on our first ride together.

STAFF PHOTOS BY ARTHUR POLLOCK

Turnout time at the end of the day lets horses run to pasture for the night at Rocking Horse Ranch.

In addition to riding, the resort lives up to its name by offering myriad activities, all free of charge. These include paddle and banana boat rides on the picturesque lake. There's also water skiing, three heated swimming pools (my wife's favorite hangout spots for most of our stay), tennis, miniature golf and an inviting playground. At night, the indoor pool stays open till 11 p.m., nice for older kids, but admittedly a mixed blessing when you want to get younger children to bed.

Parents also can have fun on their own because there is a complimentary, well-run day camp for 4- to 12-year-olds with supervised activities, from 9 to 5. There's also a children's nursery for the wee ones. You can pull your kids out of the camp at any hour for some family time.

The waterfront was a prime activity for our family. The paddle boats gave us a good workout and the two-person kayaks were easy to maneuver. My daughter's first ride in a banana boat (an eight-person inflatable raft pulled by a motorboat) left her squealing with delight. The only part she was apprehensive about was jumping off the boat at the end of ride to swim back to the dock -- despite the tranquility of the small lake, she expressed concern an octopus might come and nibble at her toes.

One of the more popular attractions at Rocking Horse Ranch, aside from the horses, is a wild banana boat ride, pulled behind a power boat.

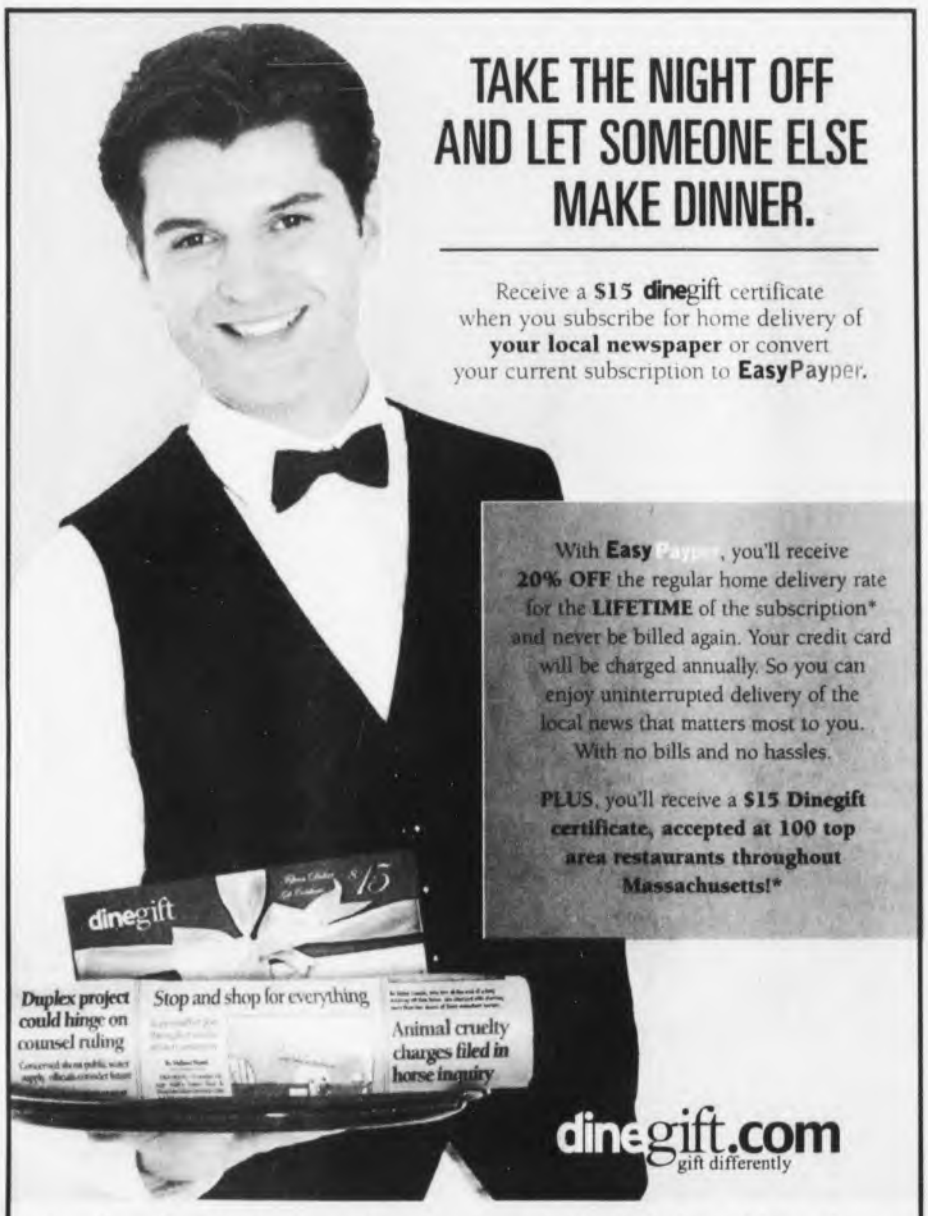
The full schedule of nighttime activities includes an opportunity to sing karaoke to your heart's content or listen to live music most nights. We learned how to square dance and do country line dances. I even picked up some of the disco moves that John Travolta performed in "Saturday Night Fever" -- I can hardly wait for my next wedding invitation to show off.

One night we attended a campfire sing-along, complete with marshmallow roasting. I fancy myself a competent cook but nonetheless, my batch caught fire and burned to a crisp. Aside from my neurotic obsession with such things, it was a perfect ending to an active day.

Accommodations are in two-story, motel-like buildings and surprisingly pleasant for a dude ranch (no real roughing it here).

Country kitchens aren't noted for their gourmet cooking and the ranch is no exception. But the food is plentiful and I didn't hear any complaints from our little cowgirl. Families eat communally (about 10 per table) with a kid-friendly menu featuring the usual favorites such as hot dogs, chicken nuggets, cheeseburgers and the ever popular make-your-own ice cream sundae bar. The ranch has even come up with clever names to disguise healthy foods for the kiddies, too, such as "cactus leaves" for salad. Adults can chow down on burritos and quesadillas, salmon, steak or chicken.

A breakfast buffet and dinner are included in your daily rate. For lunch you're on your own (kids' lunch is included in the day camp) but there are various places around the ranch -- the dining room grills, snack areas -- to purchase lunch.



One late afternoon, I was pleasantly surprised to find a (free) poolside cocktail party in full swing, offering an array of finger foods and "tarantulas" (rum, tequila, pineapple juice and creme de banana).

If the thought of riding in summer heat gives you pause, consider the other three seasons. Several guests told me about their enjoyable experiences at the ranch in the dead of winter, when there's skiing and snow tubing on the property's bunny hill, ice skating and horse-drawn sleigh rides. Plus, they assured me, the body heat of the horses keeps you warm on the trail rides.

At the end of our visit, we were only able to coax our daughter back into the car with promises to come back another time. Hopefully, by then my equestrian skills will have improved enough so she will allow me to ride with her again.

Summer rates at Rocking Horse Ranch Resort are from $230 per adult and $105 per child, per night (the rate goes down the longer you stay). Children younger than 4 are free of charge. For reservations, call 800-647-2624 or go to www.rhranch.com.

Selectmen deny request for Keno

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Abutters to DiNero's restaurant were again able to convince the board of selectmen to deny a Keno license request for the Hull Street restaurant.

The restaurant has been in pursuit of a Keno license since 2002, and abutters' comments regarding parking, traffic, and other potentially negative impacts led the board to deny DiNero's request for a Keno license that June. The request then went before the Massachusetts State Lottery Commission, which has the authority to issue the license. The lottery commission upheld the selectmen's ruling.

However, the restaurant has undergone a significant renovation which has expanded the parking lot. In light of those developments, selectmen agreed to hear the restaurant's request again and held a public hearing to discuss the issue Tuesday.

Youngsters get into the act

Are learning all about the stage

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Local kids enrolled in this summer's six-week theatre camp at Cohasset Dramatic Club might not know it. But, as director Lisa Pratt puts it, "Our kids are playing their own part in Cohasset's long standing history and theater legacy."

That theater legacy takes root as far back as the 1930s, when the original Cohasset Dramatic Club was known as the South Shore Players. This was a summer stock theater company that presented plays at the Town Hall in Cohasset every night except Sunday and for a matinee performance on Wednesday, for eight weeks each year. The Players would present a recent Broadway success or a distinguished play of the previous season, utilizing their own resident company and visiting guests

The visiting guests even included a few theatrical luminaries of the past. Such as Humphrey Bogart, who appeared on the Town Hall stage in four productions during the summer of 1934 and Fay Wray, who appeared in a summer production in 1938.

Such historical facts are also part of what a total 41 kids from Cohasset, Scituate and Norwell learned about in "week one" of the CDC theatre camp program held in conjunction with the recreation department. The first

Acapulcos to get another round

Liquor license hearing postponed

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

A liquor license violation for an Acapulcos restaurant in Norwood is having repercussions for a proposed Cohasset Acapulcos.

Tuesday afternoon, just hours before the board was scheduled to conduct a liquor license hearing for the restaurant, slated to occupy the space where KoKo Island once stood — Town Manager Bill Griffin was informed a bartender at the Norwood restaurant had been charged with serving alcohol to a minor.

Griffin said he had asked Police Chief James Hussey to contact the Norwood Police Department based on a tip. Hussey found the bartender did not ask for identification, was

Selectmen seek economic expertise

The board of selectmen realizes the benefit increasing the town's commercial tax base could have on the budget. It has set a long-range goal of looking into ways to promote economic development, and is seeking residents with expertise in that area. Anyone who is interested in planning commercial growth for the town is encouraged to contact the selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105, or send a letter of intent to Town Hall at 41 Highland Avenue.

Harbor Health Committee named

The board of selectmen has formed a new harbor health committee, and the following residents have been appointed to serve: Russ Bonetti, 20 Parker Ave.; Noel Collins, 15 Forest Ave.; Jim Drysdale, 4 Cedar Acres Lane; Paul Figueiredo, 173 Pond St.; Willy Fox, 35 Stockbridge St.; Paul Pattison, 104 Elm St.; Karen Quigley, 27 Clay Spring Road; Peter Wood, 77 Summer St.,; and Peter Workman, 43 Beechwood St.

At the suggestion of Selectman Gray Vanderweil, the board has set looking into the health of the harbor as a long-term goal. Vanderweil said things have changed dramatically with the harbor over the past few years as mollusks are disappearing, sea grass is dying, and galvanized hardware has a much shorter life when exposed to the harbor's water.

Foreign language teacher is hired

Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh announced the high school will have a new foreign language teacher this fall in Margaret Jordan.

"We're very fortunate to have her," said Walsh, who worked with Jordan before in the Silver Lake school district. Walsh said Jordan comes to Cohasset with high marks from both Silver Lake, where she taught from 1990 until the end of this school year, as well as her previous position in Hingham, where she taught from 1989-1990.

Walsh said Jordan has coordinated many guided trips for students over the years, and she is excited for her to become part of the staff in Cohasset.

Board openings

There are currently openings on both the design review board and the capital budget committee, and selectmen are looking for residents who are interested in filling those spots.

There are two full and two associate positions open on the design review board, and selectmen are looking for candidates with architectural, landscaping design, or other similar experience.

There is also one vacancy on the capital budget committee.

Residents should send a letter of interest to the board of selectmen at Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave. For more information, please call the selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105.

Train update

Much work has been happening on the railroad tracks and things are changing quickly in town. Greenbush liaisons Tom Gruber and Mark Brennan will be giving an update on what has already taken place and what residents can expect in the near future at the Aug. 9 board of selectmen's meeting. All are welcome to attend, and the meeting will be televised.

Cook hopefuls to take center stage

Presentations to be televised

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The three bidders that submitted proposals to build on the Cook Estate will present their designs to the board of selectmen Monday, Aug. 1. The meeting will be held in the selectmen's meeting room in Town Hall and will be open to the public. It will also be televised.

The presentations will begin at 6 p.m. and each bidder will be given one hour to present its vision for building senior housing on the Sohier Street site. Bids will be taken up in alphabetical order with Cohasset Associates presenting at 6 p.m., Deer Hill Partners presenting at 7 p.m. and Northland Residential presenting at 8 p.m.

Cohasset resident Donald Staszko, owner of Cohasset Plaza and President of Cohasset Associates which operates out of the plaza, will be the first to present his plans, which includes building 65 units of senior housing. Staszko submitted a $5.15 million base bid. However, he also submitted a supplemental proposal which would allow the project to use his adjacent land for wastewater discharge, which could add 20 units to the project, therefore increasing the profit the town could make on the land. Staszko has put in a supplemental offer of $5.95 million should the town decide to explore the latter option.

Staszko's development, "The Oaks Farm," would consist of 41 town homes and two low-rise apartment buildings, each of which would have 12 units, for a total of 24 apartments.

Cohasset is trying to meet a 10 percent affordable housing threshold set by the state. Twenty of Staszko's apartments will be affordable by state housing standards, and four will be market rate, bringing the total affordable housing ratio for the project up to 31 percent.

Fourteen of the apartments would be two-bedroom affordable units, and six would be one-bedroom affordable units. There would also be two two-bedroom market rate units, and two one-bedroom market rate units.

The town homes would be attached condominium-style buildings, grouped in duplexes and triplexes. There would be three floor plan models for the town homes, and all three styles would have cathedral ceilings and private decks. Town homes will have a price range of between $695,000 and $795,000.

Staszko's supplemental proposal includes utilizing his adjacent land to support wastewater for roughly 20 additional units. The extra land would also provide reserve capacity for the originally proposed 65 units.

The additional 20 units, if built, would be housed in one, 12-unit apartment building, of which 10 would be affordable housing and two would be market-rate. There would also be eight town home units built in either duplex or triplex fashion. Bid documents specify an additional $40,000 would be paid for each supplemental unit approved, up to $800,000, for a total of up to $5.95 million.

Next on the docket will be Deer Hill Partners, LLC, a partnership between Horizon Partners, LLC, of Braintree, Black Rock Development, Inc., of Hingham, headed up by Cohasset resident George McGoldrick, and Conroy Development Corp. of Stoughton. The group bid $4.9 million on the project, which would include building 56 total residential units.

McGoldrick bid before during the first round of submissions and his design was ranked second to Northland's by the Request for Proposals advisory committee.

Deer Hill Partners would like to build 25 detached, single family, market rate "carriage homes," along the outer ridge of the property. There would also be 31 one- and two-bedroom units located in the "manor home," to be built near the circular driveway that currently exists. Of the manor home units, 17 will be market rate and 14 will be affordable.

The affordable units would be sold for roughly $150,000 on average, and market rate units would range from roughly $420,000 for a manor house unit to $700,000 for a detached "cottage style" home along the perimeter.

There would be seven different condo styles and some would have three bedrooms while others would have two. Most would have two floors, but there would be single-floor units. Every home would have an attached two-car garage, and each home has the option of having a finished basement.

The three companies have much experience on the South Shore as Horizon Partners built the "Ridgewood Crossing," 55-plus housing development in Hingham, and Black Rock built "The Residences at Black Rock," in Hingham. Conroy has completed many building projects in the towns of Cannton, Stoughton and Middleborough.

Northland Residential is no stranger to making presentations in Cohasset as it made its first presentation for the Cook Estate project roughly one and one-half years ago. Northland was chosen to build 95-units of senior housing on the Cook site in March of 2004, and had been working with the town until wastewater complications on the site forced the project to be downsized and therefore put back out to bid.

Northland's now downsized project plans include 65 units of senior housing, split between 45 townhouse style condominiums and 20 mixed-income rental apartments. Northland submitted a bid of $5 million, only $425,000 less than its original bid.

The town homes would have two pricing levels and 33 would be more "upscale" with larger living areas and top of the line interiors, as well as a two car garage. There would also be 12 scaled down town homes with one-car garage s which would cost roughly $100,000 to $125,000 less than the upscale versions. Town homes could be purchased for a price of anywhere from $625,000 to $725,000.

There would be four different town home styles, and most will feature a first-floor master suite with a walk-in shower, and an attached one- or two-car garage with direct entry to the kitchen. A second bedroom would be located on either the first or second floor, and some will have loft spaces which could serve as a hobby room or home office, or as a second more informal living room.

Residences would be arranged to have a small neighborhood feel, and the main building currently located on the site would be renovated to serve as the "village clubhouse."

There would also be rental housing and one building will house 20 apartments. Of those apartments, four would be one-bedroom market rate units, and 16 would be one-bedroom affordable units.

All three bid proposals are public records available for viewing at Town Hall. Presentations will take place beginning at 6 p.m. Monday, Aug. 1 in the selectmen's meeting room. The meeting will also be televised. For more information, please contact the selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105.

Parking plans for Black Rock Beach

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Residents who live on the private way were fed up with sharing their street to out-of-towners and even some fellow residents looking for free and easy access to Black Rock Beach.

Selectman Rob Spofford said he has been getting some negative feedback regarding the new parking ban on Spindrift Lane. At the request of the street's residents, the board voted to install "no parking" signs on the street at its July 12 meeting, which if violated can mean fines for the offender.

Spofford said he has been receiving calls from residents who feel the signs are restricting access to Black Rock Beach for Cohasset residents, as it does not have a public parking lot. Selectman Chairman Fred Koed said he had heard the same kinds of concerns.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said he is actively working with the DPW to come up with a way to offer parking for Cohasset residents near the beach, potentially in an alley close by. There is a triangle portion of land at the intersection of Forest Avenue Extension and Jerusalem Road by the beach, and one of the sides is an alley which could potentially accommodate 10 cars. If parking is allowed there in the future, it will be restricted to residents with beach stickers.

Griffin said he will present information on parking proposals to the board at its next scheduled meeting, Aug. 9.

Residents who live on the private way were fed up with sharing their street to out-of-towners and even some fellow residents looking for free and easy access to Black Rock Beach. All five Spindrift Lane households banded together to sign a petition asking the board of selectmen to enforce a parking ban.

Those who live on the street, located off Forest Avenue, say they have witnessed cars parking in front of driveways and mailboxes, and even altercations in the street between those fighting for a place to park. They have also seen teenagers both drinking on the street and leaving their cars to head to the beach with alcohol. Garbage, including empty beer cans, is often left behind for homeowners to clean up, residents say.

Deep Run homeowners gear up to have a blast

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Pre-blasting surveys will be done to homes in the surrounding area to ensure if any damage is sustained during the blasts, it can be documented.

Homeowners of 6 Deep Run have been given the go-ahead to blast ledge on their property, despite abutters' concerns their homes will be damaged.

Michael and Kristyn Stevens have plans to tear down their single-family home, located on the corner of Jerusalem Road and Deep Run, and build a new shingle-style home with a wrap around porch and three-car garage. The increase in the size of the house triggered the Large Home Site Plan review process, and the planning board has approved the expansion plans.

However, part of those plans includes building a new basement, which will require blasting to clear out rock underneath the home.

Some neighbors sustained damage during blasting at a nearby Jerusalem Road home in the 1990s, and they do not want a repeat performance. During the public hearing process, many residents felt frustrated their concerns had no way of being addressed, as the large home review has no provisions for controlling blasting. Abutters were left feeling as if they had a forum to raise concerns, but no means for finding a solution.

Ken Smith of Atlantic Blasting, the company that is working with the Stevens on the project, came before the planning board July 27 with a proposal for blasting. He said he has been in touch with Fire Chief Roger Lincoln and obtained the records of the blasting which took place in 1993 to compare.

"That was a much larger project," he said of the Jerusalem Road blasting, adding there have also been advances in technology since then, which will allow him to better control the affects of the blast.

Blasting is now monitored on three different planes. One of those planes is audio, which is what causes many houses to shake. Smith said during a thunderstorm, windows often rattle at the sound of thunder, which is a result of the sound, not because the earth is shaking. Similar experiences can be had by homeowners during blasting.

During the blasts, Smith said his company will lay down extremely heavy steel mats, which will be much heavier than anything that would have been used in the 1990s, which will help stifle the effect on neighbors.

Smith said they will use the technology they have to regulate blasts, which is a delicate science. He said if the charge is too high, damage will occur, but a charge that is too low can have just as devastating an effect.

"If the charge is too little, the rock won't break," he said, which will cause the vibrations to bounce back off the ledge, rather than go through it. He said it is a balancing act between finding a charge that is too high, and too low. He will be conducting test blasts to determine the perfect charge for the rock he is dealing with.

The Stevenses agreed to set up a blasting schedule with neighbors and work will only be done between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m., Monday through Friday. Members of the fire department will be on scene during the blasting and the blasts will not be a constant throughout the day. Pre-blasting surveys will be done to homes in the surrounding area to ensure if any damage is sustained during the blasts, it can be documented.

"We'd like to begin as soon as possible. We'll need to get state and local permits, and then as soon as Ken can get his crew out to the site, we'll begin," said Stevens.

Planning board chairman Al Moore said in his opinion, he feels there has been a very thorough review of the process and given that the board's engineering consultant John Modzelewski has given his support, he feels comfortable allowing plans to move forward.

Member Peter Pratt agreed and said just as Cedarmere has become the model for housing development in town, "Six Deep Run will be the model for blasting going forward."

Cohasset residents Gregory and Jody Doyle have been awarded a check for $50,000 from the MBTA, thanks to Attorneys Peter Flynn (right) and Jason R. Scopa, shown here in front of their clients' South Main Street property. The property was taken by eminent domain by the MBTA for construction of the Greenbush line. The settlement awarded was eight times more than the MBTA's original offer.

Hefty settlement from MBTA

Roughly 10 times what was offered

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority has again paid a settlement much larger than its original offer to a South Main Street couple whose land was taken by eminent domain as part of the Greenbush line construction.

Gregory and Jody Doyle, 423 South Main St., followed in the footsteps of William and Huguette Stone, 383 South Main St., when the Doyles received damages in the amount of $50,000, an amount eight times that of the MBTA's original offer.

The Stones were the owners of a vacant lot of which the MBTA took a portion by eminent domain last November. The Stones received a check for $200,000 in March, an amount 10-times greater than the MBTA had originally offered.

The government has the right to take private land by eminent domain for public use, and there is usually compensation awarded to the owner in return. The Doyles' attorney, Peter E. Flynn of Saugus, who also represented the Stones, said the MBTA offered the Doyles $5,800 at the time of their land taking last November.

However, feeling adequate compensation was not offered, litigation was filed. Negotiations with the MBTA continued after the filing, which "allowed us to come to an agreement quickly and voluntarily dismiss the complaint before further pursuing the litigation," Flynn said.

The Doyles filed a complaint in Norfolk Superior Court on Dec. 7, 2004 — the same day the Stones filed their complaint — which stated the sum of money offered by the MBTA was "Inadequate and does not reflect the fair market value of the property taken by the defendant."

The complaint also states the Doyles are entitled to compensation for all damages, "Occasioned by the public improvement, including but not limited to pre-taking damages, severance damages, damages special and particular to the property the plaintiffs owned at the time of the taking, and all damages arising and occasioned by the taking."

Through much negotiation, the $50,000 settlement was reached, and the Doyles filed a notice of voluntary dismissal in Norfolk Superior Court this month.

"As in the Stone case, especially important to the Doyles was obtaining this resolution while also avoiding lengthy, costly, and uncertain litigation," said Flynn.

MBTA spokesman Joe Pesaturo said in order to build the Greenbush line, the MBTA has taken roughly 90 pieces of property by eminent domain throughout the entire 17-mile Greenbush corridor. There have been 30 eminent domain cases negotiated with property owners, and nine property owners, including the Doyles and the Stones , have challenged the MBTA's taking and have filed lawsuits.

The Greenbush Line is the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad Restoration Project, and is being built as mitigation for the Central Artery/Tunnel Project in downtown Boston. The project will stretch for 17 miles and once complete, will restore train service from Scituate to South Station. The project is intended to reduce automobile traffic on the congested roadways leading into the city. According to the MBTA, the project will cost roughly $479 million including planning, land, and permitting costs, along with the cost of construction and the new trains.

GOOD AND BAD NEWS

I hope as you read this you are enjoying our summer as it is going by so fast. As you will read in this column, so many wonderful pieces of news are being shared. Unfortunately, some negative is being reported on as well. Let's hope that the "Case of the Missing Buddy" can be resolved like the "Case of the Missing Kayak" was.

'BUDDY' WAS STOLEN

The following was received by us here at the Mariner and I am printing it in its entirety as I think it is absolutely horrible. If any of the culprits are reading this, please do the right thing. This is from a family who live here in town. Just imagine if Buddy were the real little boy who lives in this home.

"We are in search of our fluorescent green "Go Slow" plastic boy holding a flag. I'm sure you're familiar with them, they sell them at Joseph's Hardware for $24.99. Well, we purchased our 'Buddy' on July 4th at 2:30pm and were so excited to welcome him to our home.

"We placed him carefully at the end of our front walk and smiled with pride. Unfortunately, within 10 minutes of Buddy's arrival a carload of teenage boys driving a beige/silver colored late model Nissan Altima careened across the road and smashed our Buddy up into the air and onto our front lawn.

"I happened to be sitting on our front porch admiring Buddy at the time and witnessed the entire occurrence. Like a crazy (barefoot) mother I ran after the carload of boys. Obviously I did not catch them, but they knew I had seen their little escapade. Sunday (July 17), Buddy spent the day on a cinder block in front of our house protecting our 2-1/2 year old toddler. We put Buddy to bed in our garage at 9p.m. and when we went out at 7a.m. Monday morning Buddy was gone.

"Someone actually opened our garage and took Buddy, a criminal act if not a felony. We want parents to check their children's rooms for our boy Buddy or if you found our Buddy abandoned on your property, please contact Detective Garrett Hunt at the Cohasset Police Department."

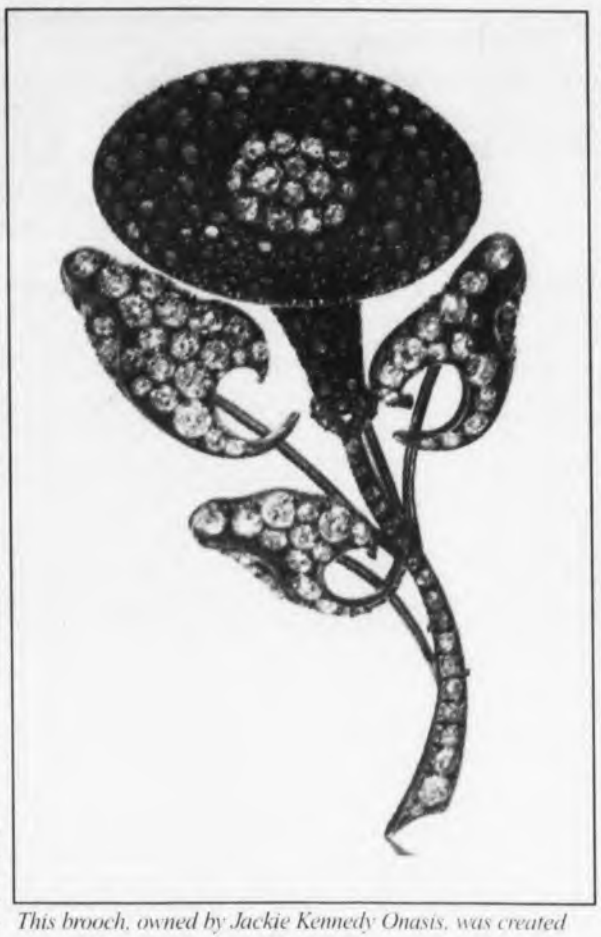
Star quality adds luster to estate sale

'Jackie O' brooch will be on display

By Sara Mason Ader
CORRESPONDENT



Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis is remembered not only for being one of the most beloved former U.S. first ladies, but also for having an exquisite sense of taste. Samples of her clothing have been exhibited at some of this country's foremost museums, and next week a piece of her jewelry — a large diamond and sapphire brooch in the shape of a calla lily —will be on display at Cohasset Jewelers' 22nd annual Estate Jewelry Sale.

The brooch was created around 1910 and features 105 small diamonds, amounting to about 4-1/4 carats, and numerous sapphires. The gemstones are embedded in a gold base with a platinum façade, which has been molded and contoured such that the stones show plenty of sparkle when viewed from any direction.

This stunning piece is on loan to Cohasset Jewelers from a South Shore family and will be available for viewing during the estate sale at the store Aug. 4-6. This year's sale will also include 600-700 pieces of estate jewelry in the Victorian, Edwardian, Art Nouveau, Art Deco and Retro styles, says Hingham native Mark Cirone, owner of Cohasset Jewelers in Tedeschi Plaza off Rte. 3A.

Although the "Jackie O." brooch will not be for sale, another piece of celebrity history will be: a pair of gold dancing shoes created for Ginger Rogers by notable jewelry designer Paul Flato.

This brooch set — adorned with diamonds, sapphires and rubies — was purchased from the estate of the famed dancer and actress by Malcolm Logan of Nelson Rarities, a Portland, Maine-based estate and antique jewelry dealer. Logan is a native of Hingham and Cohasset; he is also the son of Cohasset resident and political activist Polly Logan. Malcolm Logan will be supplying a number of the pieces available at the sale.

This brooch, owned by Jackie Kennedy Onasis, was created around 1910 and features 105 small diamonds and numerous sapphires.

This stunning piece is on loan to Cohasset Jewelers from a South Shore family and will be available for viewing during the estate sale at the store Aug. 4-6.

Aside from the estate jewelry examples that owe at least part of their value to provenance (i.e., their histories), Cirone stresses estate jewelry sales offer an excellent opportunity to find high quality and unique items.

"Much of this jewelry was made using techniques that simply are not used today," he explains. Like most other industries, automation affected the jewelry industry by rendering much of the traditional hand-crafting obsolete.

Further, the gemstones used in older pieces are often of very high quality for two reasons. First, jewelry was expensive to make and was generally intended for wealthy clients who expected the best gems. Jewelers tended not to bother crafting intricate pieces with inferior stones. Moreover, many of the world's best mines for gemstones have already been drained.

For example, one item being offered at the sale is a striking 1950s black opal surrounded by diamonds in a leaf pattern and embedded in a platinum ring. The stone encapsulates the effervescence and color of a coral reef.

"That stone came from an Australian mine that is now dry," says Cirone, adding that particular mine was known as the best source for such stones.

Another key advantage of estate jewelry is that it offers great values. "Because it's second hand, estate jewelry sells for much less than new pieces," Logan says.

Other notable items include several silver Georg Jensen brooches, a 1920s diamond-encrusted women's brooch, an Etruscan revival micro-mosaic brooch made in the Vatican in 1879, and a 120-year-old bishop's ring.

Appraisers and buyers will also be on hand at the sale.

Cohasset Jewelers has been a family-owned and operated business for more than 75 years. The company was located in Boston's jewelry district for 30 years before migrating to Cohasset 24 years ago. In the past several years, the company has donated more than $48,000 to the Susan G. Koman Breast Cancer Foundation. Most of that sum was raised through the sale of a gold lapel pin in the shape of a breast cancer ribbon studded with 18 pink cubic zirconia stones. Cirone designed the pin in honor of his wife Sharon, who has been battling breast cancer for more than a decade.

For more information about the sale or estate jewelry, contact Cohasset Jewelers at 781-383-1933.

Motoko and Gordon Deane welcome Keith Lockhart to Cohasset at the South Shore Art Center's gala reception before last year's Boston Pops benefit concert.

Lockhart and Boston Pops at South Shore Music Circus

Keith Lockart and the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra, will perform at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset, on Saturday, July 30, at 7 p.m., to benefit South Shore Art Center's education and exhibition programs.

Two special concert packages are available for those who would like to support the Art Center and spend some time with Keith Lockhart.

Maestro Lockhart, who had quite an unforgettable experience there last summer along with all who attended the sold out concert, brought down the house – and at the end of the evening promised the audience he would return.

Callaway will sing such classics as Feelin' Groovy, and MacArthur Park, on a program with Don't Touch That Dial – a medley of musical memories from the 60's. The program ends with a Baby Boomer Sing-Along, including hits from that generation's pop favorites such as Your Momma Don't Dance, Doo Wah Diddy, (I Can't Get No) Satisfaction, and YMCA.

Tickets are now on sale at the South Shore Music Circus Box Office, open daily from noon to 6 p.m., or through Ticketmaster, 617-931-2787, www.ticketmaster.com.

Two special concert packages are available for those who would like to support the Art Center and spend some time with Keith Lockhart over a buffet dinner, and prolong the enjoyment of the summer evening. Last year, Lockhart stayed for hours greeting friends and admirers while graciously posing for photos and partaking of an impressive array of food and libations. A limited number of package tickets are still available.

unaware of the liquor laws, and had not received Training for Intervention Procedures (TIPs) by the Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission (ABCC).

"We have a lot of youth in this town and I'm very sensitive to the issue of serving minors," said selectman Rob Spofford who said he needs to be reassured that what happened in Norwood will never happen in Cohasset.

Attorney Nicholas Felici, who was there on behalf of Chimichanga, Inc., the company that would operate Acapulcos, said each Acapulcos restaurant has different ownership and each is a separate corporation. He said there was an incident with a manager from a different restaurant, but it has nothing to do with the way the Cohasset Acapulcos would be run.

Felici said the Cohasset Acapulcos would be managed by Victor Ruelas, who also attended the meeting. Ruelas is part owner of the company and has much experience in the restaurant business. He has moved to Hull with his family to enable him to be closer to the restaurant.

"It looks like there could be the need for this kind of family restaurant," said Felici, as Cohasset does not have any Mexican food establishments.

However, the board was not convinced the potential for problems does not exist. Spofford asked if there is a handbook or any policies and procedures all Acapulcos restaurants abide by. Felici said because the restaurants are not a chain, each operates separately and a formal handbook does not exist.

"My comfort level is uncomfortable."
— Selectman Rob Spofford

"It's a mom-and-pop type family restaurant," he said, adding there is only a history of adhering to an informal set of policies set by the man who founded the restaurants, David Brambila. Brambila is partial owner of every Acapulcos restaurant.

Spofford said he is very concerned about granting a liquor license to a restaurant whose sister restaurant is going to begin a hearing process for violating its liquor license very soon.

"My comfort level is uncomfortable," he said.

Selectman Gary Vanderweil said he would like to see the owner of the restaurant come before the board.

"It's hard to grant a license to someone who's not here," he said.

However, Felici said liquor licenses are granted to the person who will manage the restaurant, which will be Ruelas, and he is also part owner with Brambila.

But the board said is sees Brambila as the common thread between all the restaurants, and therefore it said it would feel most comfortable if he agreed to attend the board's Aug. 23 meeting.

Spofford said at that meeting, he would like to see a list of the policies and procedures the Cohasset Acapulcos would operate under before making any decision on the transferring of the liquor license.

"I need to understand more about what the procedures will be with this restaurant so we don't have the same situation again," said Spofford.

Other Acapulcos restaurants

Currently, there are Acapulcos restaurants operating in Amesbury, Beverly, Framingham, Franklin, Milford, Norwood, Stratford, and Sudbury.

In addition to the liquor license violation in Norwood, Hussey said his background check uncovered that the former manager of the Amesbury restaurant was charged and found guilty of four counts of indecent assault and battery. He was subsequently removed as manager, and from the liquor license.

In addition, Cohasset resident Wayne Halverson, 54 Forest Ave, said he has been conducting an investigation of his own and has heard there have been even more problems than the town is aware of.

In a letter to the board of selectmen, Halverson said he had obtained information that the Milton Planning Commission had rejected the liquor license application submitted by Acapulcos for a restaurant in the Milton Landing Condominiums.

"Acapulcos presents itself as a family restaurant, yet 28 percent of its revenue is based on liquor sales," he wrote.

At the Milton hearing, Halverson said he heard other problems surfaced, including a fire in the Framingham restaurant which was a result of grease building up in the exhaust system.

During the hearing, Felici said in the past, when he has come before boards in other towns, he has often brought letters of recommendations from the towns in which the other restaurants currently operate.

"Could we get copies of those?" asked selectman Michael Sullivan.

Flashback: A little more than one year ago, Michael Tack, a representative for the Nauset Group, which is renovating the former KoKo Island site, unveiled plans which sent some abutters into a panic. Plans to turn the former Hair-Affair building into a Dunkin' Donuts with a drive-thru caused major concern with Fairoaks Lane neighbors, who worried it would cause noise pollution and an increase in traffic. Plans were also unveiled to turn the former KoKo Island restaurant into another family-style restaurant. While plans had been floated to turn it into another Asian restaurant, they did not pan out.

DiNero's parking meets town standard

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Plotner was given the go-ahead to expand by the planning board in September 2004. A site plan was approved which included a redesign of both the restaurant itself and the parking lot.

The potential for Keno to increase traffic at DiNero's is one of the main concerns voiced by residents who live near the restaurant. They say parking has been an issue for some time, which was made worse with the restaurant's expansion, and worry the situation will become worse if patrons have a reason to linger.

However, attorney Greg Sullivan, who represents owner Frank Plotner, says Plotner has been through a site plan review with the planning board, and his lot meets the requirements for the size of his restaurant. Sullivan said Plotner has abided by the town's rules , and it is his right to apply for the license.

Plotner was given the go-ahead to expand by the planning board in September 2004. A site plan was approved which included a redesign of both the restaurant itself and the parking lot.

Plotner proposed adding roughly 1,700 square feet with the renovations. Plans included creating a new function room, which can potentially be broken up into two smaller function rooms by using dividers, freeing up space in the main dining room. There used to be 70 seats at DiNero's, and that number has been increased to roughly 93 with the new expansion.

In light of the increase, parking was reconfigured to aid the flow of traffic. DiNero's is located in West Corner at 235 Hull St., and virtually sits on the road. With the former parking configuration, patrons would sometimes back up onto the street, which is a very dangerous way to exit the site.

There used to be 27 spaces striped for parking, but they were more narrow than the town requires. Thirty-seven new spaces were painted which meet Cohasset dimension requirements, two of which are set aside for the apartment located above the restaurant. Construction is still ongoing at the restaurant, and therefore some parking spaces have been temporarily occupied with construction equipment. The new configuration has two more spaces than the restaurant is required to have.

Selectmen deny DiNero's new request for Keno license; agree with abutters located at West Corner near the Hull and Hingham lines, came out in full force to express their concerns about the potential negative consequences of Keno. Many felt it would increase traffic in the already busy area, encourage patrons to stay at the bar for a longer period of time, and potentially drink more than they otherwise would. They felt it would change the character of the neighborhood.

The board agreed and objected to the application with a vote of 4-1. Selectman Michael Sullivan cast the lone vote in support of the game.

"I just don't see the negative," said Sullivan, adding while he voted against allowing Keno in the restaurant in 2002 and has never actually played the game himself, he has since become more familiar with the game and doesn't see it as being very disruptive.

"It's like an instantaneous lottery ticket," he said, adding patrons are able to go across the street to Tedeschi's and purchase scratch tickets at any time. "How do we differentiate?" he asked.

However, Vincent Dunn, 715A Jerusalem Road, said Keno is nothing like buying a scratch ticket when people tend to scratch and go, and don't linger. He said alcohol is not served at Tedeschi's, and patrons don't "spend more than a minute or two there."

Sullivan said if neighbors are worried about patrons lingering at DiNero's, a good football game could have the same effect.

Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Road, who has been very vocal about her opposition to allowing Keno at DiNero's, said the game has no place in their neighborhood. It was in fact was tried once before, she said.

"Prior to DiNero's application in 2002, Teceschi's Mini Mart across the street in Hingham installed one screen and it was removed shortly thereafter. Cars would be parked in all the spaces outside the store while Keno players stood in front of the screen watching the numbers, and patrons had no available parking spaces," she said.

Jim Reichardt, 3 Grace Drive, agreed with Plante and said there is already too much traffic in the area, "and the parking situation should be addressed now," before Keno is even considered.

Reichardt added he has three children and gambling in a family neighborhood is not a good fit.

But there were those who spoke out in favor of the game, saying it will provide another attraction for the restaurant.

Diane Hindley, 348C North Main St., said she has worked as a bartender at DiNero's for the past eight years, and every night, the television is on and patrons are watching sports games or various shows. She said the restaurant has longtime customers who are "good people who wouldn't want to bring the neighborhood down." She said Keno will provide another attraction for patrons, and the intent is not to bring on any of the negatives neighbors have mentioned.

John Devaney, 698 Jerusalem Road., said he is one of those patrons, as he and his wife have been going to DiNero's for the past 25 years. While he said he doesn't play Keno, he has seen the way owner Frank Plotner runs the restaurant and said he's done a fantastic job, and "I think it seems fair that after all the time he's put into it, the right thing to do is give it a chance."

Plotner's attorney Gregory Sullivan said the restaurant has undergone a tremendous amount of construction, the parking lot is much larger than it had previously been, and the entire area has been changed for the better.

"My client has worked extensively with the planning board to develop the restaurant," he said, adding they have done everything they can to be the best neighbors possible.

"We believe Keno is a reasonable activity, and it will have zero effect on neighbors," he said. "You won't know the difference unless you go inside the restaurant."

However, John Fairchild, 800 Jerusalem Road., said his home overlooks DiNero's and he brought in a rendering of the parking lot which detailed his observations of the parking situation at 7:15 last Thursday night. He said at that time, every parking space was full, some were double parked, and more were parked on Hull Street.

"By adding Keno, you're going to increase the time they're going to be there," he said.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said he went to dinner at DiNero's Monday night prior to the hearing, and he had a similar experience. He said construction is still underway for the expansion of the restaurant and therefore some parking spaces were occupied by large equipment. However, he said Monday night is not the busiest night of the week and the lot was extremely full.

Before the board took its vote, Town Manager Bill Griffin reminded members there is an appeal pending before the Lottery Commission from 2002. He said the board could object to the state this time around, which would be followed by another hearing at the state level.

Dormitzer said he hadn't heard an overwhelming response for Keno, but had heard and overwhelming response against it. He said he would vote against recommending Keno to serve the public interest.

Spofford said in his opinion, he doesn't think people would not go to the restaurant if it did not have Keno, as it is doing a great business right now without it.

"We're not taking away the right to play Keno," he said, because there is a machine at the Cohasset Food Mart on Route 3A. "The impact on the neighbors takes precedent," he said.

Selectman Chairman Fred Koed said his main concern was the neighborhood's concern over parking. He said while the parking lot was expanded, so was the restaurant and it defeated the purpose of trying to improve parking problems.

"As much as I'd like to see a local business flourish," he said he could not vote in favor.

Vanderweil said he was on the side of the neighbors as well, but selectman Sullivan said the restaurant is going to be crowded no matter what.

Keno, sanctioned by the lottery commission, is a game akin to Bingo. Players are given a sheet of numbers and asked to mark anywhere from one to 12 spots and can wager up to $20 on each sheet. The winning numbers are then displayed on the screen and prizes are given out based on the number of picks the player picked correctly. A new game is displayed on the Keno screen every five minutes.

It's not clear if DiNero's will appeal this latest denial.

Walsh announces four resignations

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Carrie Aronson, a middle school guidance counselor, has accepted a position at Lexington High School.

Four more positions have opened up in the school department as Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh announced the resignations of Carrie Aronson, Frances Cronin, Victoria Read, and Bonnie Palm.

Aronson, a middle school guidance counselor, has accepted a position at Lexington High School, which will be closer to home for her, and will also give her the opportunity to work with older students. Walsh said being the only middle-school guidance counselor put a tremendous strain on Aronson, and the workload was factored into her decision to leave.

"This certainly is a loss for Cohasset," said Walsh, adding guidance staff is never easy to replace, especially at the middle school level, but the prospect of working in a town like Cohasset should be a draw for many candidates.

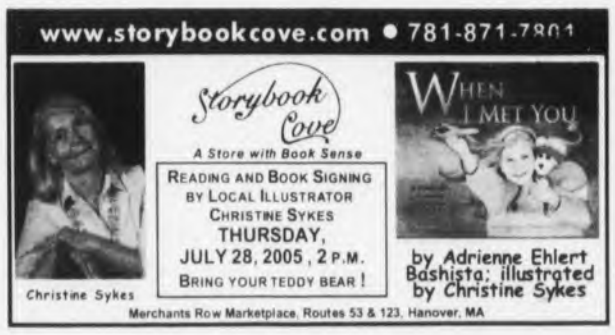
Cronin will be leaving her post as a high school English teacher, and intends to retire this November. "It's tough to replace someone in November," said Walsh, but said she hopes to be able to find a candidate who will be able to overlap duties with Cronin before she leaves.

Read has only been working in Cohasset a short time, but Walsh said she has done a wonderful job reorganizing the student services office, while serving as its secretary.

"Her husband has taken a position in upstate New York," said Walsh, adding it was a once in a lifetime opportunity they couldn't pass up and she wishes them well.

Palm has resigned from her position as a bus driver and Walsh said she hopes to hire a new transportation coordinator soon, who will help with appointing any new drivers.

FAST FACTS



Cohasset has a population of 7,550. Of those 1,486 people or roughly 20 percent are over 60.

OPINION

Turn if off already!

You've heard of TV Turnoff Week, well now there's PC Turnoff Week. No, not politically correct turnoff week — personal computer turnoff week.

The idea is being promoted by a group in Branford, Conn. for the week of Aug. 1 to 7. The reality is kids (and many adults) are spending way too much time in front of a computer screen. Or so this parents' group believes.

We can relate. Ten or 15 years ago, not all that many people had a personal computer in their home. Those who did, used it for work or were the types who enjoyed playing around with computers as a hobby. Now it seems everyone has a personal computer or a laptop available for use in their home — maybe even two or three. You can't get away from them.

Some people have some kind of computer in almost every room, maybe an assorted collection in their home of an outmoded computer from several years ago, to the latest technology on the market. We are all so wired that it really is quite amazing to think how far we've come in terms of technology over the past several years.

The computer is used for word processing, paying bills, getting news and information from around the world, blogging, meeting new people and exchanging messages, listening to music, buying merchandise and almost anything else you can think of. Computers have made our lives easier in countless ways, and in other ways, more complicated. All in all, between work and home, we are spending hours upon hours in front of a computer screen. So it seems like a good idea to give it a rest, for a day or even a week.

The PC Turnoff Organization is asking that parents pull the plug on home computers during the week of Aug. 1 to 7. They are urging parents to shut off the family computer and steer their kids toward healthier alternatives, such as playing outside with friends, riding their bike, reading a book, or going to the park.

To people raised in a simpler time, this seems like an obvious thing to do. Have we all retreated into our own little cyberspace worlds to such an extent that a designated week to turn off the computer is really necessary? It would seem so, although the success of the Harry Potter books shows that people haven't succumbed entirely to the computer age. Still, in all likelihood, kids and adults will go into withdrawal when the computer monitor goes dark for more than a day.

The Branford, Conn. group rightly points out that computers are wonderful tools, but kids can waste too much time zoning out on the computer, surfing the Internet, chatting with friends by email, and playing computer games. They argue that too much computer time isolates kids, can lead to a lack of proper exercise and can even hurt cognitive development and thinking skills.

By visiting the group's website, parents can learn tips for monitoring their kids' computer time, as well as strategies other than the computer to respond when kids say, "I'm bored." For more information on Computer Turnoff Week, visit www.pcturnoff.org.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Jason 'kept a good light'

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to say a few words about my dear, late friend Herbert Lincoln Jason — a great man!

Herb was great because he cared deeply about Cohasset for his entire 91 years.

Herb was great because he was selfless in caring and giving to others, especially to Carol Heather, Fred and John. In turn, they loved and cared for him and were with him constantly during his last years of declining health.

Herb was great because he fulfilled many of his dreams, including his dream to build a suitable memorial to Minot's Ledge Assistant Lightkeepers Joseph Wilson and Joseph Antoine who died in a gale when the first Minot's Light was swept into the sea in April 1851. Herb persisted and preserved when others said his dream of a memorial was impractical and couldn't be done. The monument was dedicated in May, 2000, on Government Island in front of a crowd of 500 people, including many Massachusetts, Coast Guard and Cohasset dignitaries.

Herb was great because he celebrated and honored his Portuguese heritage as a man of the sea. He was a proud lobsterman all his life and saved many fellow mariners who otherwise might have been lost to the sea.

Herb was tough and gentle at the same time. Too bad there are not more great men and women like Herb Jason. Herb, you "kept a good light." I shall miss you dear friend. 1-4-3.

Favors local Cook proposals

TO THE EDITOR:

Thanks to the Mariner for presenting a detailed, fairly accurate breakdown of the three bid proposals submitted for the senior and affordable housing development for the Cook Estate.

We all should be thankful that two of the proposals are from entities headed up by well known, solid, trustworthy, Cohasset residents – George McGoldrick for Dear Hill Partners and Don Staszko for Cohasset Associates – both of whom will still be residents of Cohasset long after the development is built and occupied, and will in effect, be putting their fine reputations on the line for developing a first-class project that stands the test of time, especially in the eyes of all Cohasset citizens and neighbors.

Given that the Cedarmere project has approvals for about 85 to 90 housing units, I feel it would be prudent to stay with a Cook development in the range of 55 to 60 maximum housing units. Although the town would gain a one-time additional price gain for an enlarged Cook development such as 85 units, it is not rocket science to realize that two developments each in the 90 unit size, will quickly lead to a significant jump in school enrollments, and we will be back into year – after year – after year, town tax increase overrides for school and services cost increases – the sum of which will quickly surpass, many-fold, the initial, one-time financial gain to the town.

Arts Boosters and 'Annie'

TO THE EDITOR:

This letter is to thank the Cohasset Dramatic Club for a benefit performance of "Annie." The proceeds of the performance were donated to the Cohasset Middle High School Arts Boosters.

Through their generous support, the money that was collected will be distributed to the Cohasset schools to enrich the arts programs for all the children of Cohasset.

Thanks to the many parents who helped organize this event, Susan Jaffe, Jen Piepenbrink and the many members of the Cohasset Dramatic Club who are always strong supporters of the arts.

Where can we park?

TO THE EDITOR:

As a Cohasset resident, I have regularly taken my dog to Black Rock Beach to swim and have parked on Spindrift Lane to do so. While I've never blocked a driveway, brawled, or consumed beer in someone's yard there, others apparently have, and the neighborhood has had enough, though those abuses do seem more a matter for the police department than the selectmen to address.

I read the Mariner's article about the parking ban on Spindrift Lane with curiosity, assuming it would explain where I and other visitors to that beach may legally park from now on. That information was not included. The article ought to have explained the complete parking situation for that beach.

My family pays more in property taxes than I care to think about, and our taxes help pave and plow Spindrift Lane, and maintain the beach and area around it. One of the reasons we choose to live here, and pay that premium, is for the beaches (it certainly isn't for a sewer system, sidewalks, buried wires, trash service, recycling or various other amenities many people enjoy in communities elsewhere).

It seems a fair and obvious question for both the Mariner and the selectmen to consider: Where would you like people to park? I'd love to walk, but well over a mile each way — including a stretch of 3A — would be quite a haul and not very safe with a 70-pound dog and a 22-pound baby.

Please do a follow-up story to inform residents whether the town has alternative parking solutions to enable them to use the beach; if there are no alternatives, explain why. It might also be useful to consider some less drastic approaches to parking on Spindrift Lane. If indeed the problems that occurred there were primarily caused by non-residents, why not try restricting the parking on that street to resident-only, limiting the parking hours to daylight, and having a police cruiser swing by every so often?

Flags placed near rail bed property

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Progress continues on the Greenbush project. Recently we talked about the novel retaining walls that had been constructed between the two sections of Spring Street. Now, material has been brought to the rail bed just North of Rocky Lane to construct similar retaining walls along the Sanctuary Pond area.

Last week, we had calls from citizens asking about flags that have recently been placed near the railroad property. Quite frankly, we didn't know what they were, either, until we researched them. According to our sources on the Greenbush project, you may see three different colors of flags in various places.

Blue flags are used to denote wetland areas. These are areas that are protected by laws of the Commonwealth through the Department of Environmental Protection due to the unique flora and fauna that live there. Yellow flags denote buffer zones. These are areas around wetlands that are off-limits to construction because they protect the wetlands. Any construction within the buffer zone can potentially endanger the fragile habitat of the wetland. You may also see white flags. These denote the permissible area where construction can take place without endangering the wetlands.

Although it has nothing to do with Greenbush, you will no doubt notice that North Main Street is under construction for paving. Under the mitigation agreement with the MBTA, they have agreed to pay for certain improvements to the James Brook watershed. Surface flooding has been a recurring problem near the intersection of Forest Avenue and North Main Street. To take advantage of our mitigation fund, the Town has designed and is installing a new storm-water catch basin near this intersection in front of Robbins Garage. This whole small project has been designed and constructed in 3 week time frame so that it will be complete prior to the Water Department's resurfacing of North Main Street.

The final phases of tree clearing, stump removal and preliminary rail bed grading are continuing along North Main Street near the Hingham Town line.

You may have also noticed that Jersey barriers have been installed between the two sections on Spring Street. More and more of these will be set in place at intersecting streets as a reminder that the rail bed is off limits. We have stressed over and over, that this construction site is a dangerous place, for children and adults, alike. Recently, it is rumored that one of our upstanding citizens sustained a back injury while taking their dog for a walk on the right of way, as was the custom, when the dog had an altercation with local wildlife. Yes, Virginia, it is a dangerous place.

Sandy Beach water tests are OK

ROBIN LAWRENCE

In light of the many beach closings along the south shore of Massachusetts this summer, some residents have voiced concerns about the water quality at Cohasset Sandy Beach as it relates to swimming.

Based on weekly sampling for bacteria initiated on June 14, the water quality at Sandy Beach has been excellent. The indicator organisms are "Enterococci"; bacteria most closely related to the risk of swimming in salt water and getting sick. The results are reported in the number of bacterial colonies in 100 milliliters (ml) of water. The upper limit for swimming in salt water is 104 colonies per 100 ml.

Based on weekly sampling for bacteria initiated on June 14, the water quality at Sandy Beach has been excellent.

The results of sampling at Sandy Beach are as follows:

- July 19, less than 2 colonies;
- July 12, less than 2 colonies;
- July 6, 26 colonies;
- June 28, 16 colonies;
- June 21, 4 colonies;
- June 14, less than 2 colonies.

These results are well below the action level (to close the beach for swimming) of 104 colonies per 100 ml of water.

The Cohasset Board of Health is aware of an odor problem at the south end of the beach at low tide. A sample taken from that area at low tide on July 14 was 34 colonies per 100 ml. The Board of Health will closely monitor this area through continuous testing.

The results of sampling for every beach in Massachusetts can be found at: www.mass.gov/dph and follow the links for beach water quality testing.

Should there be any known health risk at Sandy Beach, the Cohasset Board of Health will immediately close the beach for swimming.

Robin Lawrence is a member of the Board of Health and president of the Sandy Beach Association.

Non-profit donates $10K to Wellspring

Social Service League holds annual meeting

The Social Service League of Cohasset held its Annual Meeting Tuesday, May 17 at St. Stephen's Church.

Jane Reardon, the current President of the Board, opened the meeting with an update on the progress made by the League over the last year.

In 2004, it was determined that it was no longer feasible to have a social worker on staff at the League offices. In its place, the League approved a donation of $10,000 to be paid over the course of the year to Wellspring in Hull, a non-profit organization that provides domestic violence intervention programs, crisis counseling, and adult learning programs to the local community. The $10,000 donation funded a counseling program at Wellspring.

Vinny Hart, Executive Director of Wellspring, was unable to be present at the Annual Meeting but did send a report on the positive impact the League's donation had made to Wellspring's organization. In the time since the pledge was made, Wellspring was able to expand the role of the counselor in the Domestic Violence Intervention Program, and has also partnered with the South Shore Women's Center to offer support group services for victims of domestic violence. The donation has also allowed Wellspring to implement a case management system to ensure that they are providing all possible services to each client in the most efficient and effective manner. The League's donation has enabled Wellspring to increase their counseling services to clients by more than 100 percent in less than a year!

The League's donation has enabled Wellspring to increase their counseling services to clients by more than 100 percent in less than a year!

Counseling is only one way that the League provides services in Cohasset and surrounding communities. Much of the work the League does is handled through the Program Committee, chaired in 2004-05 by Holly Hill. Over the past year, the Program Committee has sponsored Character Education programs at the Joseph Osgood School, Job Banks at the Middle School, and the Spring College Fair at the High School. During the holidays the League provided meals and gifts for those in need. A lecture by Alan Jacobson, Psy. D., the Director of Outpatient Services at Bayview Associates, on inappropriate sexual behavior, was held for concerned parents at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library on April 8. The lecture was so well received that the Program Committee is considering bringing it back next year.

The donation to Wellspring and programs that the League offers in the community are made possible by the fundraising efforts of the Outreach Committee and the proceeds from the Consignment Shop. The Outreach Committee, chaired by Mary McGoldrick, hosted its fourth annual fundraising event, a fashion show at the Lightkeeper's Residence, featuring items from the Consignment Shop modeled by local personalities from Cohasset. The evening was hosted by newscaster Anthony Everett and raised more than $7,000 for League. The Outreach Committee also produces "The Beacon," a semi-annual newsletter containing information about the League and upcoming programs.

Also providing a source of revenue for the League is the Cohasset Consignment Shop, currently managed by Amber Nolan. The Consignment Shop has not only provided a source of revenue for the League over the years, but has also provided a great source of reasonably priced clothing, furniture and accessories for the community, as well as providing income for the consignors. Diane Shipp, Chair of the Consignment Shop Committee, thanked all of the volunteers that make the Consignment Shop run on a daily basis, and shared her optimism about the Shop's future.

Rosemary O'Connell, Chair of the Nominating Committee, introduced the new Chairs for 2005-06; Kathy Wuttke, Treasurer, Susan Magruder and Holly Hill, Co-Chairs of the Program Committee, and Marita Carpenter, Chair of the Consignment Shop Committee. Sandra Halverson will stay on as Vice-President, and Patty Smith as Secretary. Jeff Steele will continue to run the Meals on Wheels program and schedule the many volunteers who drive and deliver food to those who need it, whatever the weather. Leslie LeMaire will continue in her position as the League's Office Administrator.

In closing, thanks were extended to Rev. Cliff Cutler for the use of the space at St. Stephen's, and to all of the Board members who devote their time and energy to the Social Service League of Cohasset.

Everybody loves Harry

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth and I was searching for a topic on which to write the great American novel, a published author of my acquaintance told me that the three subjects people most liked to read about were Abraham Lincoln, doctors and dogs.

"Therefore," he concluded, "if you write a book about Lincoln's doctor's dog you'll sell more books than Grace Metalious" — which shows you how long it's been since I gave up thinking of writing the great American novel.

And I'm not sure there isn't a bookseller in the Brazilian rain forest trying to translate "muggles" and "Gryffindor" into a native language.

Lincoln, I felt I could do without too much trouble but doctors were folks I never seemed to meet unless I was sick and dogs . . . well, you have to get up early in the morning to take them for a walk since they're not smart enough to pull the chain themselves.

But I digress . . .

Perhaps if my acquaintance, the published author, were advising me today he would add one more subject to his list of three hot topics and that would be a teenaged wizard named Harry Potter and his friends at Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry.

I suppose you noticed the other day, as did I, that the latest in the series, "Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince," sold 6.9 million copies in the first 24 hours that it was on sale to people who waited up until midnight to buy it. That, even by my mathematically challenged mind, is 287,500 an hour and 4,791 a minute.

That was two weeks ago. By now, sales figures have probably reached Biblical proportions and that Book has been on the best-seller list since the Year One. And I'm not sure there isn't a bookseller in the Brazilian rain forest trying to translate "muggles" and "Gryffindor" into a native language.

Since the first Harry Potter book, "Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone," hit the stands in 1997, the series has sold more than 270 million in 62 languages, and has earned a half a billion dollars for the American publishers, Scholastic, Inc. The value of stock in its English publisher, Bloomsbury plc, has shot up 600 per cent.

I'm told that the author, J.K. Rowling, gets to bank $4 for each book sold which means that she got $27.6 million just for the first 24 hours that "the Half-Blood Prince" was on sale. Why, that's as much as some baseball players get for a whole season and they have to play as much as three hours a day to get it.

The 6.9 million copies of "The Half-Blood Prince" was a record for a first day book sale. The old record? Why "Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix," number five in the series, with five million, of course. And Amazon, the online bookseller, is already taking orders for the next and final one.

Lincoln's doctor's dog never had it so good.

Gov. Romney: rollback state income tax to 5 percent

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

The Legislature shifted into a higher gear last week, but in a reversal of the common pattern, focused on the needs of the distant future while putting off decisions about the near term.

Bills started moving at a noticeably picked-up pace as lawmakers wrapped up major business before the summer lull. They agreed to invest $200 million in affordable housing production and preservation, and mulled the governor's $1.28 billion capital spending budget, but for the time being took no action on the disposition of a sizeable state surplus.

Word came that in fiscal 2005, the state collected more than $17 billion for the first time ever, leaving a $1.15 billion revenue surplus compared to assumptions on which this year's budget was based. It's too soon to say what the actual surplus was, because final spending numbers are not yet known.

But on Beacon Hill, as in living rooms statewide, it's never too soon to start arguing about what to do with some extra cash. And it will have a lot of extra cash this year. But while policymakers were willing to authorize investments that stretch over decades — Romney also recommended spending $400 million in surplus funds on public higher education infrastructure improvements — top legislators were closed-mouth and tight-fisted about disposing of this year's surplus. Not so the governor — he repeated that it's also grounds for immediate rollback of the state income tax to 5 percent, as voters mandated in 2000.

Democrats weren't so sure. The Senate recently did approve language that would lower the income tax rate if spending on local aid rises back to its fiscal 2002 level. But that's far from a final document. The House has yet to weigh in at all and leaders there sounded apprehensive about the plan.

In the short term, and in the face of growing problems, the House and Senate did agree more money can and should be spent in the courts. Accused criminals very nearly walked free last summer after attorneys started opting out of the "bar advocate" system in droves, citing hourly pay rates that are the lowest in the nation. Modest increases were approved, but it wasn't enough; another crisis wasn't just brewing, it arrived July 1, when about two thirds of lawyers eligible declined to sign up for another year.

The House had wanted to wait to tie the pay hikes to systemic reform, but with the problem so obvious, and the Senate having approved an increase, representatives ended up going along for the most part, although the branches still need to resolve differing details of their bar advocate pay raise bills. It was the perfect example of how a surplus takes the "tough" out of "tough choices."

• Senate moves on major bills as it closes out for summer — Besides the bar advocate measure, the Senate approved legislation adding Massachusetts to a nationwide compact that tracks the whereabouts of ex-offenders; went along with the House on the $200 million housing bond; approved the bill setting up Aug. 13 and Aug. 14 as the sales tax holiday this year; and finalized the override of a raft of Romney vetoes, including the one that would have cancelled a decrease in the amount state employees must pay for health insurance.

• Wrongly-convicted witness blasts Romney's J-court pick — "How can you make him a judge if he lies?" William Johnson asked the Governor's Council, speaking against the appointment of Henry Rigali to the Hampden County Juvenile Court. "He should have a job working for the garbage department. He has no honor whatsoever." In 1985, the state Appeals Court overturned Johnson's conviction for assault, finding that Rigali traded lenient treatment for another defendant in return for that defendant's testimony against Johnson. But a stream of witnesses, including jurists in the court where Rigali would serve, praised his character and performance.

• Decision point nearing for Romney on emergency contraception — A conference committee came to agreement on a bill requiring hospital emergency rooms — including facilities operated by Catholic and other privately-owned hospital pharmacies — to dispense the morning-after pill to women who have been raped. The bill also allows trained pharmacists to dispense emergency contraception pills to women, including teenagers, without a prescription. Supporters of the bill say it will prevent many abortions and assist women who have had unprotected sex or contraceptive failure. Romney's made no declaration as to whether he'll sign or veto the measure, opposed by social conservatives on the grounds it constitutes abortion. Lt. Gov. Kerry Healey has said she supports it, underscoring her pro-choice position. The bill passed unanimously in the Senate and by a 128 to 24 vote in the House, so any veto can be overridden.

• Romney rides t to assure public on safety — As terrorists attempted to strike again on the London subway system, Gov. Romney returned from a visit to Washington and boarded a train at Park Street Station specifically to emphasize that mass transit in Massachusetts is safe, though in a state of high alert.

• Cities and towns ask for help with skyrocketing health costs — The price of insuring municipal workers is going up four times as fast as community budgets, the Massachusetts Taxpayer Foundation found in a report released this week. The MTF backed proposals offered by Senate President Robert Travaglini and Gov. Romney to give cities and towns more power to control health costs. State government, which has no union-signoff requirement, saw half the increase of local government, MTF found.

• Governor's operations office draws scrutiny — Lights! Camera! Government! That's pretty much what the story on the Governor's Operations Office boils down to. The $365,000 operation, housed in the State House basement, represents far more than has ever been spent to advance the governor's appearances — and sometimes tend to his personal appearance as well. Democrats charged the office is a taxpayer-funded presidential-preparation machine; Republicans countered they've reduced spending on the governor's office overall, and that the Operations Office performs legitimate, necessary functions.

• Reilly halts referendum on stem-cell research — Saying the constitution prohibits ballot questions dealing with distinctively religious issues, Attorney General Thomas Reilly ruled a referendum to repeal the embryonic stem cell research law is ineligible for the 2006 ballot. The law seeks to make it easier to perform stem cell research, but also protects the rights of researchers and medical staff who refuse to perform the work on the grounds of "sincerely-held religious practices or beliefs." That was enough to keep the question off the ballot, Reilly decided.

• With red tide easing, state officials reopen shellfish beds— This year's outbreak was the worst ever, and led the governor to make an unsuccessful plea for federal disaster aid. But nature is running its course, the toxic algae blooms are disappearing, and the state's shellfish-biology office opened most of the beds that had been closed; some species will remain off limits for the time being.

• Menino blasts Romney's auto-insurance plan as punitive — Boston Mayor Thomas Menino said the governor's bill, which calls for more competition, a reduced role for state regulators, and replacement of the system for spreading the costs of high-risk motorists, would unfairly subject Boston residents to higher rates simply because of their demographics, not their driving records. The governor's plan "would decrease the affect one's driving record had on the overall equation and would therefore be unfair," Menino said in a letter to legislative leaders, asking them to draft an alternative approach to insurance reform.

• Problems with buses take them off line — The MBTA took 150 of its newest buses off the road after two crashes in as many days were linked to "torque rods" tying the vehicles' steering to their suspension system. Metal plates will be installed underneath all the buses, which may have been damaged at a common point: an exposed manhole cover in the North End.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives and senators' votes on six roll calls from the week of July 18-22.

	Sen. Hedlund	Rep. Bradley
SALES TAX-FREE WEEKEND IN AUGUST (H 4220) House 145-7, Senate 36-1, approved and sent to Gov. Mitt Romney a bill allowing consumers to buy most products that cost under $2500 the weekend of Saturday, August 13 and Sunday August 14 without paying the state's five percent sales tax. The tax waiver does not apply to the sale of telecommunications, gas, steam, electricity, motor vehicles, motorboats, meals or tobacco. Supporters said that the holiday would provide a revenue boost for retailers and save millions of dollars for consumers. They noted that a similar one-day holiday in 2004 saved shoppers an estimated $10 million and resulted in a 500 percent increase in retail sales for the one day. They argued that the reduction in sales tax revenue would be offset by increased revenue from the meals and gas tax generated by shoppers. Some opponents said that the Legislature should be looking at broader, deeper tax relief and not a tiny tax-free holiday. Others said that the Legislature should not vote for tax cuts when it has not restored all the local aid, education and other cuts that it made over the past few years. (A "Yes" vote is for the tax-free holiday. A "No" vote is against it).	N	Y
EMERGENCY CONTRACEPTION (S 2073) House 128-24 and 142-9, Senate 37-0, approved a bill requiring that hospitals offer female rape victims emergency contraception commonly known as the "morning-after pill" without a doctor's prescription. The measure also allows licensed pharmacists who have completed a training course to dispense the pill without a prescription to any woman in accordance with prior written procedures developed by a physician. This version of the bill, hammered out by a conference committee after each branch approved its own version, now needs one more vote of approval in the Senate prior to going to Gov. Romney. Supporters said that the bill would provide easier access to the pill for women who are raped or have unprotected sex. They said that this would reduce many unintended pregnancies and abortions. Some opponents said that the bill would unfairly force Catholic hospitals and medical personnel to perform these "chemical abortions" that are against their religious views and would result in the firing of employees who refused to do so. Others said that the bill does not impose any age restrictions and would allow girls as young as 12 to receive the pill at the local drugstore without the consent or knowledge of her parents. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill. A "No" vote is against the bill).	Y	Y/Y
$200 MILLION FOR AFFORDABLE HOUSING (H 4277) House 152-0 and 151-0, Senate 36-0 and 37-0, approved and sent to Gov. Romney a $200 million housing bond bill to fund two programs that help build affordable housing in Massachusetts. The measure provides $100 million for the Affordable Housing and Trust Fund and $100 million for the Housing Stabilization Fund. Supporters said that these two funds make grants and other forms of assistance available to cities and towns, community development corporations and other groups to support the acquisition, development or preservation of affordable housing units. They noted that the state lacks sufficient affordable housing and argued that families are moving out of the state. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill).	Y/Y	Y/Y
$100,000 FOR GAY AND LESBIAN YOUTH (H 4200) House 130-21, Senate 36-0, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of $100,000 in funding for the Governor's Commission on Gay and Lesbian Youth. The governor attempted to reduce the funding from $350,000 to $250,000. Override supporters said that the cut is outrageous and would reduce the resources of this vital commission that was created in 1992 by former Gov. William Weld in order to combat the rising suicide rate among and incidents of violence and discrimination against gay and lesbian youth. They noted that the commission helps promote school and community-based programs to work on these problems. Override opponents said that the commission was funded at $250,000 last year and argued that an increase is not necessary. (A "Yes" vote is for the additional $100,000. A "No" vote is against the additional $100,000).	Y	Y
REDUCE STATE EMPLOYEES' HEALTH INSURANCE PREMIUMS (H 4200) House 140-11, Senate 37-0, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of a provision reducing from the current 20 percent to 15 percent, the percentage of the health insurance premium paid by state workers earning over $35,000 per year. The reduction would take effect on December 31, 2005. Override supporters said that the percentage was raised during the fiscal crisis of 2003 and argued that it is time to reduce this burden on state workers. They noted that many of these hardworking employees have not had a pay raise in several years. Override opponents said that it is not unreasonable for state workers earning over $35,000 to continue to pay 20 percent. They noted many workers in cities and towns and the private sector pay up to 50 percent of their premiums. (A "Yes" vote is for reducing the premiums paid by state workers for their health insurance. A "No" vote is against the reduction).	Y	Y
MONITOR CRIMINALS AND PAY PUBLIC DEFENDERS (H 4287 and H 4192) House 152-0, Senate 37-0, approved different versions of a bill increasing the pay of attorneys who are hired by the courts to represent indigent defendants. Supporters said that attorneys are refusing to work as public defenders at ridiculously low wages and argued that the hikes must be approved in order to avoid the possible release of dangerous defendants who would be set free if they are not provided with legal representation. The Senate version of the bill also authorizes Massachusetts to join a multi-state compact that manages and monitors the movement across state lines of more than 250,000 criminals currently on parole or probation. The compact's goal is to keep track of offenders who relocate to a state other than the one in which they were convicted. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill. The Senate roll call is on the pay hike and the compact. The House roll call is on only the pay hike).	Y	Y

Y = Yes; N = No, NV = No Vote

Self defense is on Cohasset's RADar

By Deanna Gillen
CORRESPONDENT

With college fast approaching, most Cohasset graduates are finishing up their summer reading and getting ready to pack. Taking a course in self defense may be the farthest thing from their mind.

But for female students, a special program slated for next month could provide some valuable tools because the alarming fact is that one out of every four college-aged women is sexually assaulted.

RAD, which is short for Rape Aggression Defense System, helps young women protect themselves.

"It is a very sensitive issue, for a lot of people, for parents and students [alike]. It's hard for people to realize that it's a real danger to consider," says Linda Keller, who has been instrumental in bringing the program to Cohasset. "That's the last thing you want to think about when sending your daughter off to college is that she could be sexually assaulted. I think it is so important to install programs like this because it is instrumental in raising awareness about the need to take steps to protect yourself.

"The best time to take the RAD program is before you go to college. That is not to say that assault doesn't happen in high school, because it does. But there is such a dramatic change in lifestyle of high school and college. When you go off to college, you make your own decisions, have a lot of independence, and don't have parents to [monitor] your every move."

Keller's daughter, Sarah Kidder, started a RAD program at Union College where she was a student.

"The most important thing about RAD is that it raises awareness," explains Kidder, a 2001 Cohasset High graduate. She notes some Cohasset teens haven't been exposed to the dangers they may face on college campuses, such as partying and excessive drinking.

"There are a lot of dangers there," Kidder said. "RAD puts it in your consciousness that you are vulnerable, but also that there are ways to keep yourself safe."

Someone close to Kidder is a survivor of a sexual assault that occurred when she was just 15.

"I think it is so important to install programs like this because it is instrumental in raising awareness about the need to take steps to protect yourself."
— Linda Keller, coordinator

" She took the program, and she is the reason I got involved in taking steps to protect myself," Kidder says. "She was silent for a long time because she did not know how to deal with that.

"A lot of survivors feel alone, and they don't know where to go for help, and they don't realize that people actually want to help," Kidder says.

She said RAD has impacted her life so many times in a very dramatic way.

"I've had girls come up to me and say 'Thank you, this has changed my life.' Just knowing that I have changed one person's life for the better, and made her realize that there is hope for the future, well it is something I would love to continue in Med School," Kidder says.

Keller, Kidder's mother, has worked with the police and school departments and Social Service League to start a RAD program in Cohasset. The first RAD class was introduced to the students of Cohasset High School in the spring of 2004.

The program gets high marks from the Social Service League, school and police chief.

"If you have the knowledge and information, it's a lot less likely to find yourself in a bad situation," says Holly Hill, the ofthe Program Committee of the Social Service League.

Cohasset Police Chief James Hussey concurred.

"Those who grow up in a smaller community atmosphere are not exposed to the things of people living in a bigger city," he said. "RAD will open the students eyes to things they may not have been exposed to before, will give the students different things to consider when they go off to college, and will better prepare them to make that adjustment.

"I hope the students will take advantage of this opportunity, for it will not just be beneficial now, but also later on in life. It will give these students the skills to [defend] themselves, that they will be able to use indefinitely," he sys.

"RAD was piloted in a class of 15 senior girls," CMHS assistant principal Mike Gill says. "It's benefit is primarily self defense. The victims learn different ways to defend themselves in difficult situations."

However, the program dealt a temporary setback with the departure of Officer Mike Carni, a RAD certified police officer, who transferred back to Abington.

In June, Deb Beale, a gym teacher and coach at Cohasset High School, stepped up to the plate and obtained her certification.

Gill acknowledged "no matter what community a student grows up in, they will eventually go off, and [inevitably] leave their comfort zone. If they ever find themselves in a difficult situation, they will at least have the means to defend themselves."

RAD self-defense program

A RAD self-defense workshop will be offered in August at Cohasset Middle-High School. The fee is $25. Space is limited; priority will be given to college-bound students. Anyone interested should call the Social Service League at 781-383-0821.

RAD, which stands for Rape Aggression Defense Systems, offers realistic self-defense tactics and techniques for women. It is a comprehensive program that begins by teaching awareness, prevention, risk reduction and risk avoidance, and progresses to the basics of hands-on defense training. The course does not offer training in the martial arts. Students are given a manual and workbook which outlines the program, and a free lifetime return and practice policy is offered for all R.A.D. graduates.

Night heron pair spotted on bird walk

Straits Pond is home to feathered friends

By Nancy Kramer
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

At the annual spring Straits Pond bird walk last month with Sally Avery, Cohasset birder, we added another bird to our Straits Pond area bird list.

A Black Crowned Night Heron pair was spotted on the peninsula on the Cohasset side of the Pond. These birds have been spotted for several years on the Pond Island and other areas of the Pond but not during our annual walks. There have been flocks of night herons in the Hull Village area and individual night herons around the Spinnaker Island Common Tern breeding platform, also.

This night heron has a stocky body, with a comparatively short neck and legs. On average, females are slightly smaller than the males. These birds have a black cap, upper back and scapulars; gray wings, rump and tail; and white to pale gray underparts. The bill is stout and black, and the eyes are red. For most of the year, the legs of the adult are yellow-green, but turn pink during the breeding season.

These birds have a black cap, upper back and scapulars; gray wings, rump and tail; and white to pale gray underparts.

Other birds sighted and heard that are already on the Pond area bird list were: Double-crested Cormorant, Snowy Egret, Canada Goose, Mute Swan, American Black Duck, Mallard, Osprey, Herring Gull, Great Black-backed Gull, Common Tern, Rock Dove, Mourning Dove, Chimney Swift, Belted Kingfisher, Warbling Vireo, Blue Jay, American Crow, Tree Swallow (many), Barn Swallow, White-breasted Nuthatch, House Wren, American Robin, Gray Catbird, Northern Mockingbird, European Starling, Yellow Warbler, Common Yellowthroat, Chipping Sparrow, Song Sparrow, Northern Cardinal, Red-winged Blackbird, Common Grackle, Brown-headed Cowbird, Baltimore Oriole, House Finch, American Goldfinch, House Sparrow.

Bird species from past spring and fall walks are listed on the weirriver.org web site.

There are currently four Mute Swan nests in the Pond and about 40 Mute Swans. The tree swallow houses are all occupied, and these birds and their offspring are helping to keep the adult midge and mosquito populations down, although there has been another large midge outbreak reported in the second week of June. Tree swallow house number 29 is missing, since the last Nor'easter and speculation is that it may have floated out through the open tide gates at some time. If anyone has seen the missing tree swallow house mounted on a floating tire, please call Bill McNamara at 781-925-1988.

The dream ends

After a memorable run, Cohasset Little Leaguers finish fifth in state

By Joe Campbell
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Editor's Note: Joe Campbell is the head coach of the Cohasset Little League Williamsport team.

The remarkable run for a spot in the Little League World Series is over for the Cohasset Williamsport team.

The team was made up of an All-Star team of 11- and 12-year olds. After capturing the first ever District 8 championship for Cohasset, this gritty band of ballplayers lost in the sectional finals to a strong Dudley team on Sunday, 6-1.

The team was made up of an All-Star team of 11- and 12-year olds. After capturing the first ever District 8 championship for Cohasset, this gritty band of ballplayers lost in the sectional finals to a strong Dudley team on Sunday, 6-1.

The tournament ending loss put Cohasset in a four-way tie for 5th place in the state - a remarkable feat considering there are 238 Little League teams in Massachusetts. This made Cohasset varsity baseball coach Al Galotta all smiles, as he followed the team from game to game. Coach G will have to wait a couple more years for this talented group to make it to the high school diamond.

The Cohasset 12 made their way to the finals by beating a talented Middleboro squad twice in three days. Middleboro is the perennial powerhouse from District 7. They had been the sectional champs four out of the past five years.

In what has turned out to be typical fashion for this group, they won both Middleboro games by one run in extra innings. In total, Cohasset won five of their seven games by one run, and four of those games in their last at-bat. This group never quit when they fell behind and almost beat Dudley in their second game on their last at-bat, but left them loaded with the winning run at the plate. This, after falling behind 10-1 after 4 innings.

The metamorphosis from a nice competitive team to a stingy, mentally tough champion was one that was laced with great sportsmanship, great athleticism, and great teamwork. The coaches kidded amongst themselves early in the tournament that this group was like the '04 Red Sox, a "merry band" that was unfazed by pressure and oblivious to their supposed limitations.

In the end, they were a proud "Band of Brothers" that backed each other up, and fought off the challenges from much larger towns. They won and lost together, as a team with class and dignity. They provided many great memories for the coaches, their parents and their fans.

The players on this team were: Ben Campbell, Jeff Cavanaro, John Collins, Jeff Durkin, Luke Ernst, Jamie Faber, Anders Goetz, Robbie Hill, Robert Jones, Patrick Kearney, Michael Monaco, and Gabe Seksay. The coaches were Joe Campbell, Bill Cavanaro and Mike Kearney.

League President Liam O'Connell submitted this report on the 6-5 seven inning victory over Middleboro last Thursday in Braintree. Sports editor Mark Goodman contributed.

The magical post season continues...

Cohasset's Williamsport boys team squared off with Middleboro tonight in the first game of the Massachusetts Sweet 16. Middleboro had rolled through its district undefeated, and started a big, hard throwing righty on the mound.

Cohasset countered with the crafty Anders Goetz. Middleboro jumped to an early 1-0 lead, but Cohasset evened the score on a smoked line drive by Mike Monaco. Middleboro soon went up 2-1, but the boys in blue came back again – Goetz on a deep triple to right, knocked in by Ben Campbell's single to right. After six, it remained deadlocked 2-2.

Middleboro scored three in the top of the seventh, including a long homerun to dead center. For most teams, things would have

Second annual home run derby

Event honors Gregory Moynahan

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

By all accounts, last year's home run derby in honor of the late Gregory Moynahan was a success.

So much so, another derby has been planned for Saturday, Aug. 6, at the baseball field of Scituate High School.

The derby will start at 11 a.m. for all participants younger than 17. At around 1 p.m., the 17+ competition will kick off.

The derby will be conducted much like the Major League Baseball event; each hitter gets 10 outs, with any swing not resulting in a home run counted as an out. Prizes will be available for the event.

The derby is a family event that will consist of more than just baseball. There will be a free barbecue, raffle tickets on sale, and a dunk tank on the premises. Raffle items include Red Sox and Patriots tickets, rounds of golf at local courses, and much more.

Eric Gill, the event's organizer, made it clear that "everyone should come prepared for the dunk tank."

Gill was a longtime friend of Moynahan, a 23-year-old Scituate man who died in April of last year in a car accident.

Moynahan had recently graduated from Stonehill College and was planning to attend law school. Many in Scituate knew him through his involvement with baseball and the Scituate Little League.

An outfielder during his days at Scituate High, (Class of 1999), Moynahan was comfortable taking in the game from a few feet behind the plate as well, and he served as an umpire and umpire coordinator for the Scituate Little League for several years. Gill was also a Little League umpire and graduated from SHS with Moynahan.

About 300 people turned out at last year's derby - either to participate or watch - which raised money for the Greg Moynahan Memorial Fund. Those funds went toward a commemorative plaque at the town's Greenbush Little League field to honor Moynahan's accomplishments to Scituate Little League baseball.

Remaining funds also went to a scholarship in Moynahan's name, which was awarded this year to recent SHS graduate Joe Obert. Money raised at this year's event will also go toward the fund and a scholarship for a member of the Class of '06 at Scituate High.

Registration for the event is $15 beforehand, $20 the day of the event. Checks should be made out to the Greg Moynahan Memorial Fund, and mailed to Eric Gill, 45 James Way, Scituate, MA 02066.

For further information or if you have any questions, you may contact Gill at 781-545-4032.

Jamie Faber smacks a three-run double to tie the first game against Middleboro.

looked bleak.

But not this team, not this year.

A Goetz grounder got through the second baseman, followed by a Campbell walk. Robbie Jones hit his third long fly out of the night to center (he was robbed of a home run earlier in the game on an over the fence catch).

With one down and the score still 5-2, Cavanaro walked to load the bases. To the plates strode the ever cool Jamie Faber. In a hit for the ages, Faber ripped double into left field, clearing the bases and tying the game.

Seksay then a hard grounder to short, too hot to handle - Faber went to third on the play, with Seksay on first. Robbie Hill came to the plate and knocked a single to left. Faber scores - Cohasset wins! Another incredible comeback by this incredible team.

Robbie said afterward that even in a 5-2 hole going to the bottom of the seventh, he and his teammates remained confident.

"We had a feeling we could do it," he said. "We were kind of hoping to hold them in the top of the inning, but we didn't lose hope.

"It feels amazing," Robbie continued about his game-winner. "It's my first ever game-winning hit; it's so cool."

O'Connell submitted this report on the 12-11, seven inning victory over Middleboro last Saturday in Millbury:

It was somewhat like some grand dramatic staged production…

The scene - Millbury, a bit of a drive away, but a glorious night with a nice field to play on. The American flag bunting, young kids throwing on the sidelines, hamburgers and dogs grilling, Cohasset faithful cloaked in blue; a night that makes you grateful to live where we live.

Act One: Marlboro's orange and black jump to a 1-0 lead, but Cohasset roars back and a takes a commanding 8 -2 lead after three. There were a number of big plays and memories: Collins rips a double into left center, up against the fence; Hill follows with a double off the fence; Seksay (he of the wingspan) makes an incredible stab of a liner at first; Collins turns on a fastball, and we all make like Fisk, waving it to stay fair, as it bangs up against the fence at the 200 foot marker, just foul; Faber stabs a grounder at short, pivots, and throws a bullet to second to get the lead runner.

And then, when you think you have seen it all, Ernst makes one of those ESPN highlight catches in left - just amazing - flat out horizontal diving grab of a long shot into the gap. It looked like our night.

Act Two: Give Marlboro the credit they deserve. As the sun settled into night, and the bugs start to bite, Marlboro's bats came alive. A hit here, a hit there, and it's 8-3 with the bases loaded. Middleboro hits a grand slam, and the score suddenly narrows to 8-7. But Marlboro is not finished as two more cross the plate.

After five, just like that, Cohasset trails 9-8.

Act Three: Top of the 6th. Coach Campbell, Cool Hand Luke in the third base box, telling the kids all to relax, have fun, breathe… and it works, as Cohasset rallies. Cavanaro's speed is the difference, and he slides in with the tying run. The lads don't stop there, and two more cross. Cohasset leads, 11-9.

Act Four: Bottom of the 6th, Cohasset is looking to slam the door. With two outs, Marlboro scratches out a hit. Big Number 33 (the one with the grand slam earlier) strides the plate; honest, it was like a movie. Strike one, then strike two on a wonderful changeup; one strike away!

Then, the unthinkable, as big number 33 hits a moon shot over the left center field fence. It's tied again…can you believe this?

Act Five: Top of the 7th, and Cavanaro leads off. First pitch - WAY BACK, WAY BACK…GONE! Cohasset leads again, 12-11.

Act Six: Bottom of the seventh, Robert Jones on the mound. Better than Foulke, better than Schilling, he gets Middleboro 1-2-3. Cohasset wins another incredible game - 12-11. You couldn't make this up.

Theatre camp helps kids get into the act

week workshop, titled "All About the Stage" and led by Pratt, also covered every aspect of the Cohasset Town Hall Auditorium — the stage, it's drops, flys, wings and dressing rooms.

The six-week program will climax with the dramatic club's presentation of Lewis Carroll's classic "Alice In Wonderland." Performances are at Cohasset Town Hall and scheduled for Friday, Aug. 5, 10 a.m. and 7:30p.m., and Saturday, Aug. 6, 2 p.m. and 7:30 p.m.

"We are trying to immerse the Summer Workshop Program participants in an intensive six-week theatrical adventure, to add to the kids' knowledge and hands-on learning about all aspects of theater."

— Lisa Pratt, director

"We are trying to immerse the Summer Workshop Program participants in an intensive six-week theatrical adventure, to add to the kids' knowledge and hands-on learning about all aspects of theater," said Pratt, a Cohasset resident. The summer theatre program and performances are presented in cooperation with the Cohasset Recreation Department. The stage production is directed by Pratt, with help from musical director Mark Bono of Milton, Jean DiGiacomandrea of Scituate, and Jen Piepenbrink of Cohasset.

"All About the Stage" is part of the addition of four weeks of theatrical workshops new for this summer's program. The others for "weeks two, three and four" covered "Acting and Improvisation;" "How to Make your Character Come Alive with Hair, Makeup and Costumes;" and "Lighting and Set Design," respectively, and were led by such CDC board members and theatre professionals, Jessica McDonald, Susan Jaffe and Tom Finegan

"In the second week, the kids had a great time letting go of their everyday lives and inhibitions to become everything from a woman locked out of her house late at night, to someone stuck on a deserted island, to two ladies in a hair salon frantic and worried over a bad haircut. Jess taught the kids how speech, body language and creativity can create a theatrical scene anytime, anywhere," Pratt said.

In the third week seminar, leader Jaffe, described by Pratt as extremely well-versed in costume and makeup design, brought the students through the progression of starting with a clean slate, an actor in no makeup and street clothes. Then, the application of makeup to set the tone of the actor's mindset, the adoption of a costume to set the mood even further, and finally the addition of language, dialect, accent and physical characteristics to fully create and embody a character for the stage. Together, the group created a leprechaun, pirate, clown, cat and witch.

In the fourth and final seminar, Finegan, with help from local construction company owner Mark Chason, highlighted how to create the mood and tone for any type of scene by utilizing set structures and painted flats accompanied by lighting to enhance and support that mood. Their demonstrations included such designs as daylight on a sunny farm day in Kansas, the Garden of the Queen and the dark and mysterious castle of a witch.

Pratt's own theatre experience includes many years as an actor and director with the Cohasset Dramatic Club and Second Congregational Church as well as Hingham's Civic Music Theatre. She also plays clarinet in the Cohasset based brass and woodwinds ensemble the Rusty Skippers, which were recently featured in the Cohasset Mariner.

"The commitment of the kids and their families to the program is amazing. The kids really come ready to learn and rehearse, and they're involved in every aspect of the production, like making some of their own costumes, such as the giant playing cards as part of the costumes of the Queen of Hearts guards. Also, they've contributed to the set painting and the input on the overall set design," Pratt said.

Tickets for CDC's "Alice In Wonderland" are $10 each and available at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset and Front Street Bookstore in Scituate. Also, by calling 617 697-2115 and at the door for performances.

McCauley Braun, 12, will be portraying Alice in the summer theatre camp production "Alice in Wonderland." Performances are at Cohasset Town Hall and scheduled for Friday, Aug. 5, 10 a.m. and 7:30p.m., and Saturday, Aug. 6, 2 p.m. and 7:30 p.m.

Careers in health care beckon adult learners

By Betsy Wadland
NATICK VNA

What do health care, bottled water and capri pants have in common? Answer: Demand for all three is high.

And while capri pants are sure to fall out of favor and people may get tired of buying plain water, the demand for high-quality health care will continue to grow.

This means that there are wonderful opportunities available for people who want to work in health care. Once armed with a high school diploma, anyone with an interest or background in the sciences can pursue a meaningful health care career.

There are wonderful opportunities available for people who want to work in health care.

In as little as 75 hours at the American Red Cross, a person can become certified as a home-care aide. Of course, programs of two years, four years and more are also available, allowing someone to become a registered nurse, physical therapist or occupational therapist.

As with most careers, there are many paths a person may take. Many community colleges offer an associate's degree in nursing (two years) or, at colleges and universities, a four-year bachelor of science in nursing can be earned. For those who want to continue on, a nurse can also become a nurse practitioner, and ultimately earn a master's of science in nursing degree.

Although a master's degree is required for practice in the field of physical therapy, there is also the opportunity to practice as an assistant. Many community colleges offer two-year programs to become a physical therapy assistant (PTA) or a certified occupational therapy assistant (COTA). These certifications are a great way for people to begin working in the field in a relatively short period of time. Once these initial levels of certification are earned, people can then work toward higher degrees and certification while gaining valuable experience working in their chosen field.

Health care offers a wide range of career opportunities and salary ranges. It is a field that makes it easy for people to enter at different levels and work their way up the ladder by continuing their education. It's also a field that welcomes people who choose health care as a second career. Many people find that their life experiences and professional training help them a great deal when they decide start to a career in health care.

In short, it's never too late to think about a career in health care. Whether people attend a short training course or earn a master's degree, there are opportunities at all levels in health care, and these opportunities will only grow.

Who's getting an MBA now?

By Liz Reisberg
MBA TOUR

The master's degree in business administration was once the gold key to a promising and lucrative career.

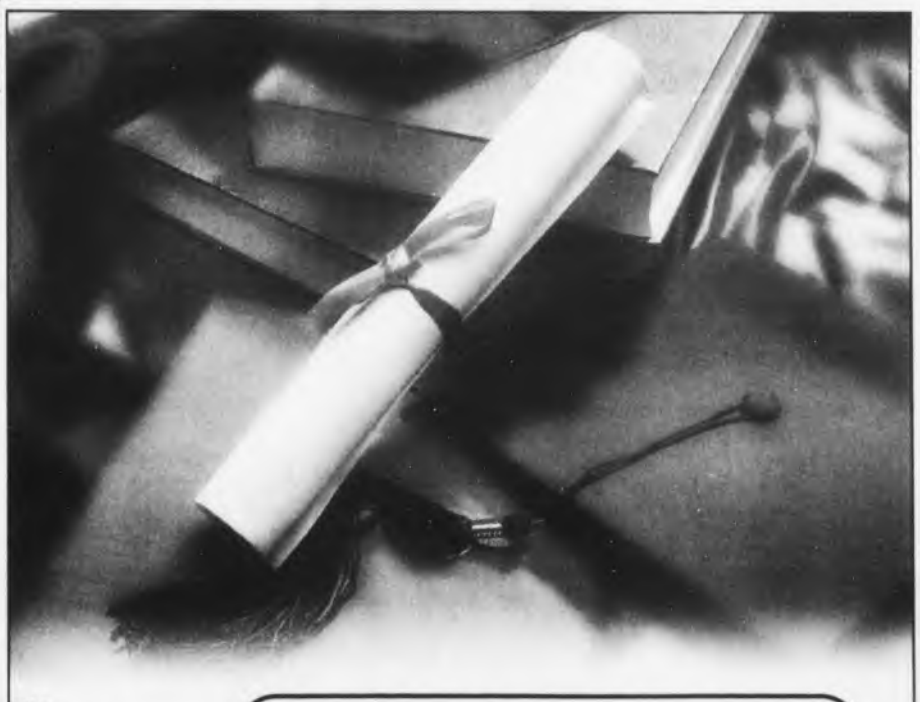
As recently as five years ago, young professionals were flocking to MBA programs with the hope of increasing their salaries by 50 percent up to 100 percent upon graduation. The tech boom and start-ups were hungry for management talent and jobs were plentiful.

Booms and bubbles tend to be short-lived and the demand for newly-graduated MBAs began to slow. So, one might ask, is there a good reason to earn an MBA now?

Although the MBA is less likely to offer instant magic today, it is often a critical piece in the career development of many professionals. The skills and experiences that one gains in the program provide the background that people need to fill in missing skills for better performance (for example, people management skills for engineers or financial management skills for social workers), develop new skills in order to change careers (move from a technical job to a management role in the same or a different industry) or move into a role with greater responsibility in their current field.

For most people, the MBA degree provides the base necessary for greater career flexibility over the course of their working life. Today, it isn't so much a question of what the MBA will do for you in the short-term, but where you will be 10 years from now if you don't have one.

According to Christie St. John, senior associate director of admissions at the Tuck School at Dartmouth College, "Young professionals know that they will move up the ladder much more quickly if they have an MBA. They also recognize that even though they might be laid off during an economic downturn (even if they have an MBA), they'll be the first ones hired back."



Furthermore, the general management skills and knowledge acquired in an MBA program give people the base necessary to pursue different kinds of job opportunities in different industries. In today's world, people tend to change jobs multiple times during their professional lives, and the MBA can make a big difference in opening up possibilities.

Amanda Carlson, assistant director of admissions at Columbia University Business School, says people come to Columbia's MBA program because, "They are looking for a life-long skill set."

At the conferences and fairs that The MBA Tour organizes around the world, we see a more sophisticated audience today compared with five years ago. The people who attend have already done considerable research about the MBA and arrive with more substantial questions. We are less likely to hear, "What is the minimum GMAT score required?" and much more likely to hear, "What percentage of your students are career changers, and can you give me examples of the opportunities and industries they move into?"

For people who wish to explore MBA options at the top business schools in the United States, there will be an all-day conference hosted by the Boston University School of Management on Saturday, Sept. 17. Unlike large fairs, this program is designed to promote informal dialogue with admissions officers in small group seminars and workshops. It's a low-pressure program with multiple opportunities to discuss and consider what the future might hold. More information is available at: www.thembatour.com.

Liz Reisberg is executive director of the MBA Tour, which promotes college programs aimed at earning a master's of business administration.

Keeping up with changing corporate America

Colleges partner with business to provide professional development

By Jennifer Fiorentino
DEAN COLLEGE

There was a time when attending college was simply viewed as the logical next step for graduating high-school seniors. It was within the chosen institution of higher learning the student acquired the knowledge and skills necessary to pursue a career.

While the role of academia has remained consistent in that capacity, its role in relation to the working professional is changing, needing to become more proactive than ever before.

In fact, its role has morphed from a place that opened its doors, welcoming waiting students with open arms, to one that may very well rely more heavily on establishing solid partnerships in "Corporate America."

Many companies currently assign employee development opportunities on an informal basis, according to the Society for Human Resource Management, SHRM. But with an anticipated labor shortage due to the expected retirement of millions of baby boomers in the coming decade, many of whom will be taking their knowledge and experience with them, organizations may find it necessary to move toward formally assigning training programs as part of a structured employee development process to address the growth potential of current employees. According to SHRM, only a minority of companies currently enlist formal methods of employee development, including succession planning, job rotation and career mentoring programs.

"Many employers feel that the knowledge, experience and skills employees acquire in their day-to-day tasks are sufficient for developing talent," said Debra Cohen, chief knowledge officer of SHRM. "However, with so many key employees positioned to retire in the near future, companies need to take formal steps to ensure smooth transitions and business continuity. When the talent and knowledge of retiring workers walks out the door, every organization needs to make sure they have others ready to fill the gaps."

Because of this, higher education – in relation to workforce planning and development – is poised to play a more prominent role in helping companies achieve training goals. While many larger organizations, including local corporations like EMC or Fidelity Investments, have the luxury of maintaining formal employee training programs internally, there are others that must rely on external entities to fulfill training needs.

Through the School of Professional and Continuing Studies, SPCS, Dean College has begun to reach out to employers in close proximity to its Franklin campus. Through a unique partnership established with Putnam Investments eight years ago, employees of the company are provided access to on-site training programs. Likewise, students of Dean are afforded the benefit of participating in internship programs.

"The key is to build strategic partnerships that help us meet the real needs of the adult learner rather than simply reacting to what we just 'think' they need. This way, we are helping them achieve their goals," said Francine Fink, dean of the School of Professional and Continuing Studies at Dean College.

Dean College has formed partnerships with local businesses to provide appropriate training coursework.

But it doesn't stop there. Boston-based Suffolk University has recognized a need to offer working professionals in companies located in more rural sections of the state access to baccalaureate and even graduate-level courses without the need to commute into the city. Suffolk and Dean have established a partnership that gives working professionals, especially those along the Interstate 495 beltway, access to such programs right on the Dean College campus.

Regardless of the shape taken by Corporate America in the coming years, one thing is certain: The need for lifelong learning will remain a constant. The goal of both academic and corporate entities should be to create strategic alliances that will help address the future of workforce training and development.

Jennifer Fiorentino is director of Public Relations & Communications for Dean College in Franklin.

Women's colleges offer options for lifelong learners

By Charlie Breitrose
DAILY NEWS STAFF

As she considered going back to college, Needham's Theresa McGuire decided to check out her local campus, Wellesley College, to take a class this summer.

The intense, four-week course on Roman law proved to be intriguing to McGuire, now 54, and her presence in a class of mainly college-aged students proved to be valuable, according to her professor, Ray Starr.

McGuire returned to school to finish her bachelor's degree after raising four children. Wellesley, like other women's colleges in the Greater Boston area, has programs for older learners who want to return to finish a degree or get a second degree.

Wellesley offers a special program for older students, said Catherine Rooks, director of Wellesley's summer school, called the Davis Scholars. During the year the classes are all women, but during the summer men can also enroll.

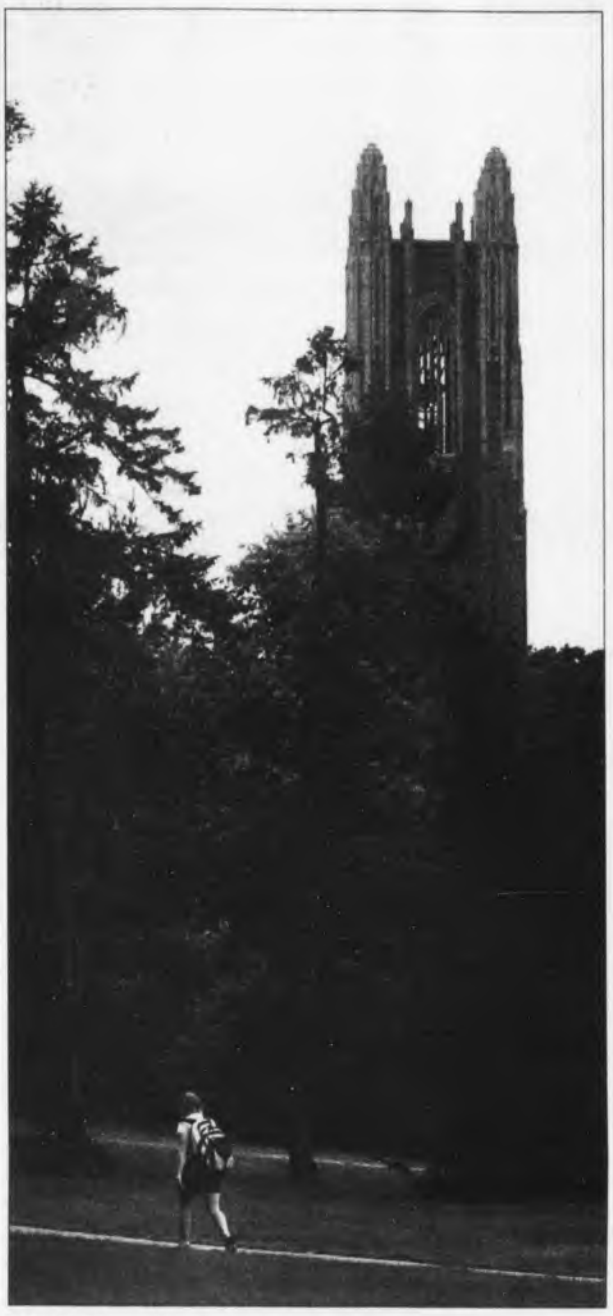
"We have a fair number of Davis Scholars, which means they are not on the traditional track," Rooks said. "They may have taken a number of years off and decided to come back."

McGuire wanted to get the degree she never finished. Despite having a career as a human resources and personnel director for several companies, she never got her bachelor's degree.

"It has always been in the back of my mind," McGuire said. "I had a successful career, and basically retired from that about 18 years ago to raise my family."

Because she already has had a career, McGuire said she has the luxury of "learning for learning's sake," and can study whatever she wanted.

"I took one class, Roman Law, which turned out to be very detailed; a lot of work, a lot of reading, incredibly interesting and very worthwhile," McGuire said.



The class was very intimate, McGuire said, with only five students and she was the only non-traditional student.

"I don't think it felt odd. They were all nice people," McGuire said. "It was interesting, we had different points of view in terms of life experiences. We were all about doing the course, and that kind of thing is the great equalizer.

"I listened to things that happened in their school lives, and I had things I thought were interesting to them."

Starr, a professor of classics who taught the Roman law course, said he often has Davis Scholars, and he likes the knowledge they bring to the class.

"It's fantastic," Starr said.

In the Roman law course, some of the topics of discussion include marriage, divorce, birth, citizenship and how contracts work, Starr said, noting that the continuing-education students can lend some insight from their own lives.

"A continuing-education student has had more legal experience, perhaps bought a house, got married and even had a child," Starr said. "Continuing-education students, because they have more experience, lend a more enriching perspective to the class."

Simmons College, in Boston, offers a similar program to Wellesley's, aimed at women who want to go back to college. At Simmons, the students in the program are known as Dorothea Lynde Dix Scholars, said Catherine Capolupo, director of undergraduate admissions, who went back as a Dix Scholar to get a second bachelor's degree.

The students must apply to the college and meet certain requirements. The college will work with the person, Capolupo said, to give them college credits even if they never went to college.

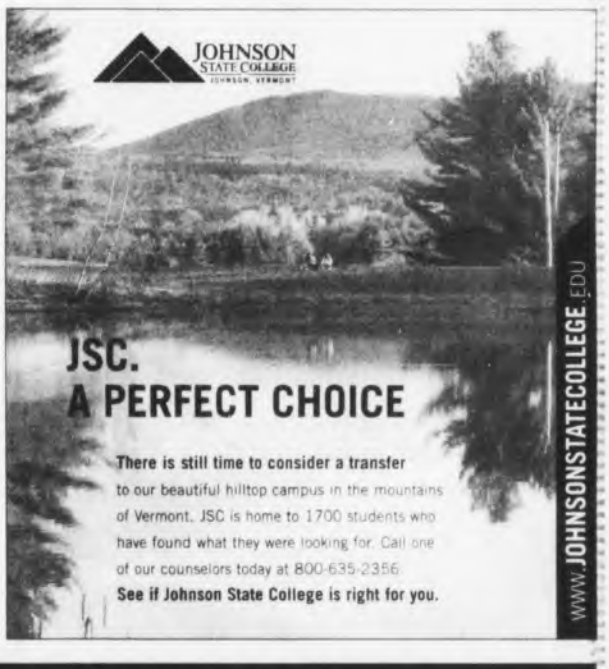
"They receive credit for prior learning," Capolupo said. "A good example is many of the women who enroll, who are coming for a management degree, often times have been working side by side with a person at their job who already has a college degree, and can do the same job. They are given credit for prior experiences."

When they begin applying to be a Dix Scholar, the college assigns perspective students with an admissions counselor to make sure they are prepared for the course.

Dix Scholars take the same classes as the traditional students, and they make up a significant part of the college enrollment, Capolupo said, estimating that about a quarter of the 1,800 undergraduates are Dix Scholars. They come from a wide array of backgrounds, too, she said.

"Some are coming back to school. Some started their degree 15 years ago, and never finished. Some never went to college, but achieved in other ways," Capolupo said. "And we may have someone in her 70s who just wants to take some classes."

One problem faced by all continuing-education students, Capolupo said, is the cost of tuition.



"Some people think they can't go back to school, in part because of finances," Capolupo said. "We encourage them to apply for financial aid, even if they don't think they qualify.'

My family was watching a home video of a trip to Florida we took. I was pregnant with my youngest daughter in the video (now age 2). My older daughter (age 3), Nicole, asked where her sister was in the video. I said, "She was in my tummy." Nicole then asked, "Why did you eat her?"

On the South Shore

JULY 28 - AUGUST 5 2005

A little Broadway on Sohier Street

Callaway joins Pops in Music Circus concert to benefit SSAC

Cabaret singer Liz Callaway

On Saturday, the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra will return to the South Shore Music Circus for the second straight year for a concert which will again benefit the South Shore Arts Center in Cohasset. Joining Maestro Keith Lockhart and the orchestra this year will be Broadway and cabaret singer Liz Callaway.

"It is a thrill to sing with the Boston Pops. Singing with an orchestra as magnificent as this one really enhances the music for me," explained Callaway, 44, by telephone from her Westchester, N.Y., home last week. "I just have to control my own excitement while I'm performing with them."

Callaway has been exciting theater and cabaret audiences for 25 years in shows like "Cats" and "Miss Saigon" and in concert appearances at some of New York's "swankiest" supper clubs. In addition to her own albums and several recorded with her sister, Ann Hampton Callaway, the Chicago native's singing voice can also be heard in animated feature films including "The Return of Jafar," "Aladdin and The King of Thieves," "Lion King 2: Simba's Pride" "Beauty and the Beast," and "The Brave Little Toaster Goes to Mars."

"I love recording and I love voicing animated movies, but my first love is theater. I love doing Broadway. I like to originate, but that's not to say I wouldn't go in to a show as a replacement if it was something really good."

In the meantime, Callaway will appear with the Pops for five concerts this summer starting with Cohasset. The Pops program will be comprised of music from "America," a collection of patriotic favorites, the orchestra's second self-produced and distributed recording which was released last month. Callaway's program will feature 1960s hits by everyone from Paul Simon, The Beatles, and Sonny Bono to Burt Bachrach and Hal David.

"Most of the songs I'll be doing will be from my album, 'The Beat Goes On.' I did surveys to see what was most people's favorite 1960s music and there were so many songs to chose from that I finally decided to do the songs I love."

And do some in a new way, and others in the manner that made them classics. "I loved 'Downtown' just the way it was so I didn't mess with that one. On 'Up, Up and Away,' however, we gave it a whole different New Age kind of feel. Jimmy Webb, who wrote it, heard our version and said he liked what we did with it. I sing 'Where Have All the Flowers Gone?' straightforwardly and let people take it as they will. Perhaps because of the war in Iraq, some people find it very moving."

Liz Callaway will join Keith Lockhart and the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra at the South Shore Music Circus on Saturday, July 30 at 7 p.m. For tickets, call 617-931-2787 or visit www.themusiccircus.org. Premium ticket packages, which include a pre-show champagne reception and a post-concert event with Keith Lockhart, are available by calling 781-383-2787.

An American Idol in Plymouth

Ruben Studdard plays Memorial Hall Aug. 6

Ruben Studdard

There will be an "American Idol" in America's Hometown on August 6 when Ruben Studdard, the second season winner of the Fox-TV mega-hit, performs in concert at Plymouth Memorial Hall.

"I love performing in front of a live audience. It's a lot of fun. I try to make people feel like they're in my living room and I am singing just to them. I've dreamed about about this my whole life. And I continue to thank God every day for all the good things that have happened to me," explained Studdard last week by telephone of his highly successful concert and recording career launched two years ago when over 24 million callers voted him their American Idol.

Studdard, 26, was known to many fewer people just a few years ago when he was performing with a gospel group, "God's Gift," in his Birmingham, Alabama, hometown and also singing in a jazz and R&B band called "Just a Few Cats."

"We played a lot of local clubs and we did some concerts, too. We were one of the most popular groups in Birmingham. We hadn't recorded a demo, but we were planning for one."

When one of the group's back-up singers decided to go to Nashville to audition for "American Idol," she asked her friend Ruben to join her.

"She just wanted me to come along so that she wouldn't be there all by herself. I figured I had nothing to lose so I entered the contest, too."

Before long, Studdard was among the finalists and on his way to Hollywood. Week after week, he earned high marks from judges Paula Abdul, Simon Cowell, and Randy Jackson and the viewing public. By the time guest judge Gladys Knight dubbed him "The Velvet Teddy Bear," Studdard was well on his way to winning the six-month long competition.

"I got over stage fright early in my life so I never got nervous doing the show. And since a career in music is something I always wanted, winning was truly the fulfillment of my dreams."

Christine Hurley

With help from recording industry legend Clive Davis and a team of top producers, Studdard recorded his debut album, "Soulful," which went double platinum and earned the singer his first Grammy Award nomination for "Best R&B Vocal Performance, Male." With the November 2004 release of "I Need An Angel," his sophomore album for J Records, Studdard returned to the music he has sung almost every Sunday since childhood.

"I had been singing only non-spiritual material for about three or four years, but gospel music was just about all I sang before that so doing an inspirational record was a natural thing for me. I was blessed to do that album and very pleased to see it sell so well."

Already at work on his upcoming third album, "The Return of the Velvet Teddy Bear," the former A&M University football player knows he has reality TV to thank for his very real success.

"The American public loves to feel responsible for making someone's dream come true. Without 'Idol,' I'd still be in college. I promised my Mom I would finish my degree and she still brings it up to me."

A return to the classroom may happen one day, but for now the singer remains focused on his music career.

"I'm very comfortable in a recording studio and on a concert stage so I'm loving things just the way they are right now. I'm building a nest egg, though, so that if I want to give this all up at some point I can."

(Ruben Studdard will perform at Plymouth Memorial Hall, 83 Court Street, Plymouth, Saturday, Aug. 6 at 7:30 p.m.. Opening for Studdard will be Plymouth's own Christine Hurley, finalist on "Nick at Nites Search for America's Funniest Mom!" For tickets and information, call 866-468-7619. Tickets are also available at all Strawberries locations.)

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS

Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

HEAR AND NOW

At least one-quarter of Americans over the age of sixty-five suffer from hearing impairment, making it the third most prevalent condition among the elderly, exceeded only by high blood pressure and arthritis. According to American Speech-Language-Hearing Association, by 2030, about 21 million Americans aged 65 and older are expected to have hearing loss. More than 90% of cases of hearing loss are sensorineural ("nerve deafness"), which typically results from damage to the hair cells of the cochlea. In fact, nerve deafness associated with aging is the most common form of hearing loss in this country. The good news in all this is that using a hearing instrument can help with this form of hearing loss.

The first step toward better hearing is recognizing that a hearing problem exists. Having your hearing tested is the second step. If the signs are there - asking people to repeat themselves, turning up the volume on the TV, or frequently misunderstanding what is being said - please call us at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER. We have the answers to many of the questions you'll probably have regarding your hearing impairment. From fittings to follow-up care from a Board Certified Hearing Instrument Specialist, you can rely on us at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Building in Weymouth. PH: 781-337-1144.

P.S. Sensorineural hearing loss is characterized by the loss of the ability to hear high frequency sounds, as well as difficulty filtering out background noise.

Bargains by the sea

Caribbean doesn't have to be so costly

By David Swanson
SPECIAL TO THE HERALD

For many of us, apparently, it's just not an island vacation without a seafront balcony edged by white sand. And who can argue with that?

But in the Caribbean, prices for beachfront rooms tend to spike well beyond the "affordable" category. Instead, Caribbean-bound travelers on a lean budget stretch their dollars by compromising with rooms not directly on the water. The good news is you don't have to.

There are beachfront bargains, even on the priciest islands, such as Anguilla and St. Barts. Yes, if you travel in the summer or early fall off-season, you should watch weather reports for hurricanes and trip cancellation insurance is advised (although the chance of actually encountering a storm is slim; I've traveled to the islands during hurricane season more than 50 times in the last two decades. Never been hit.). Most off-season discounts run until December, but the time to snag a bargain for fall or winter travel is now.

Here are five of my personal favorite Caribbean bargains, offering both solid value and soft sand within a stone's throw of your room. You won't find any name-brand chain resorts in this bunch. Starting rates listed below are for two, off-season and then high season; taxes are extra.

Carimar Beach Club, Anguilla ($160, $340)

Pricey Anguilla has more than its fair share of superb beaches, and the dozen or so that are occupied by resorts big and small represent varying degrees of fabulous. But when Malliouhana, the island's first major resort, was scouting for a location and had its pick of the litter, its developers chose lovely Meads Bay. There is no better sweep of pearly white sand on Anguilla.

But you don't have to challenge your Gold Card limit to stay on Meads Bay, for right on the sand is the 24-unit Carimar Beach Club, individually owned condos wrapped around a nicely tended garden. Room decor is straightforward, but consistently attractive. Each of the one- and two-bedroom units has a full kitchen, so you can stock up at the local deli for easy meals. All have a view of the sea, and the more expensive rooms in front sit right on the sand. There's no restaurant or bar, but you'll find three of the island's better dining rooms within a 10-minute walk.

Sandcastle, Jost Van Dyke, British Virgin Islands ($140, $225)

There's no airport, so you'll reach this tiny backwater from Tortola, via a dilapidated ferry named "When." There's also no golf course, no casino, no duty-free shopping — three-square-mile Jost Van Dyke reveals the Caribbean distilled down to its essentials. But there is a trio of picture-perfect beaches, and sitting in the middle of resplendent White Bay is the six-room Sandcastle, the island's closest approximation of a hotel.

One of the wonderful, relaxing vistas that await you in the Caribbean

You won't find much beyond kayaks and board games, and that's the point. Oh, and a bar that — legend has it — is where the "Painkiller" was invented. Rooms sit on the sand, and have sun-heated showers and electricity (most of the time); two even have air conditioning. You won't spend many waking hours in your room, though, as the hammock-laced beach delivers perfect relaxation. The small, informal restaurant serves meals to guests and the yachties who drop anchor. Otherwise, you can check in to Sandcastle with little more than a bathing suit and a change of clothes — the true barefoot holiday.

Rockhouse, Jamaica ($75, $125)

Surprisingly, many of the original accommodations built in Negril in the 1970s weren't on the famed beach, but along a two-mile stretch of cliffs just beyond, known as the West End. Here, more than a dozen small hotels are perched along the rocks, and steps, ladders or cave-like passageways lead down to the water. No, they're not beachfront, but swimming and snorkeling amid the seductive grottos is rewarding in its own way.

Built in 1972, Rockhouse has since seen considerable refurbishing and expansion and can now claim the hip milieu of a rugged boutique resort, but your wallet won't get taken for a ride. Least expensive are rooms found in two-story buildings set back from the cliff — they're small and short on privacy, but still clean and attractive. Better are the original thatch-roof stone cottages, some of which have private outdoor showers — you can dive into the water from a few of the rooms, or from wooden bridges spanning the cliffs.

A striking modern pool and bar has been built into the rocks, and the restaurant is a solid choice.

Bleu Outre Mer, St. Barts ($1,000/week, $2,500/week)

The French West Indies, priced in euros, are pricier than ever. So what's St. Barts — priciest island in the Caribbean — doing on this bargain list? Through a strange but welcome quirk, villa rentals are sold in dollars, and therefore villa rates haven't experienced the currency-related spike seen at French island hotels. Although St. Barts is renowned for lavish villas with Hollywood pedigrees and $10,000-a-week price tags, there are alternatives.

Right on St. Jean beach, the island's half-mile-long sea-and-be-scene, Bleu Outre Mer is a complex of five down-to-earth one-bedroom bungalows. These aren't fancy, primped hideouts for starlets, but they're sensible options for a couple who want a hotel room, plus a kitchen, and don't mind giving up a hotel's front desk ministrations (you'll still get daily maid service). The great curving bay is at your doorstep, and a watersports operator sits next door. The location is so central that more than two dozen restaurants, a supermarket and shopping are within a 10-minute walk.

Cinnamon Bay Campground, St. John, U.S. Virgin Islands ($70, $110)

Eco-tourism has its roots on St. John, home to the U.S. Virgin Islands National Park, which occupies two-thirds of the island. The time-honored "campgrounds" where low-impact travel began are alive and well.

Actually, Cinnamon Bay started as a series of rustic bungalows, created by the late Laurance Rockefeller as an alternative to the expensive nearby resort Caneel Bay. At Cinnamon Bay, the 40 screened, open-air rooms have electricity, simple cooking facilities and four twin beds; you'll pay $20 to $30 extra for a beachfront unit — these are so close to the beach you might have to sweep sand out of the doorway. Less expensive still are the semi-permanent tents, equipped with wooden floors, gas lanterns and stoves. A restaurant serves three meals through the day.

This style of vacation is not for everyone (you'll make your own bed, and bathrooms are provided in four shared facilities with toilets and — eek! — unheated showers). But how many other places can you name with rooms under $100 a night with a ravishing white sand beach on one side of your bed, and a treasured national park on the other?

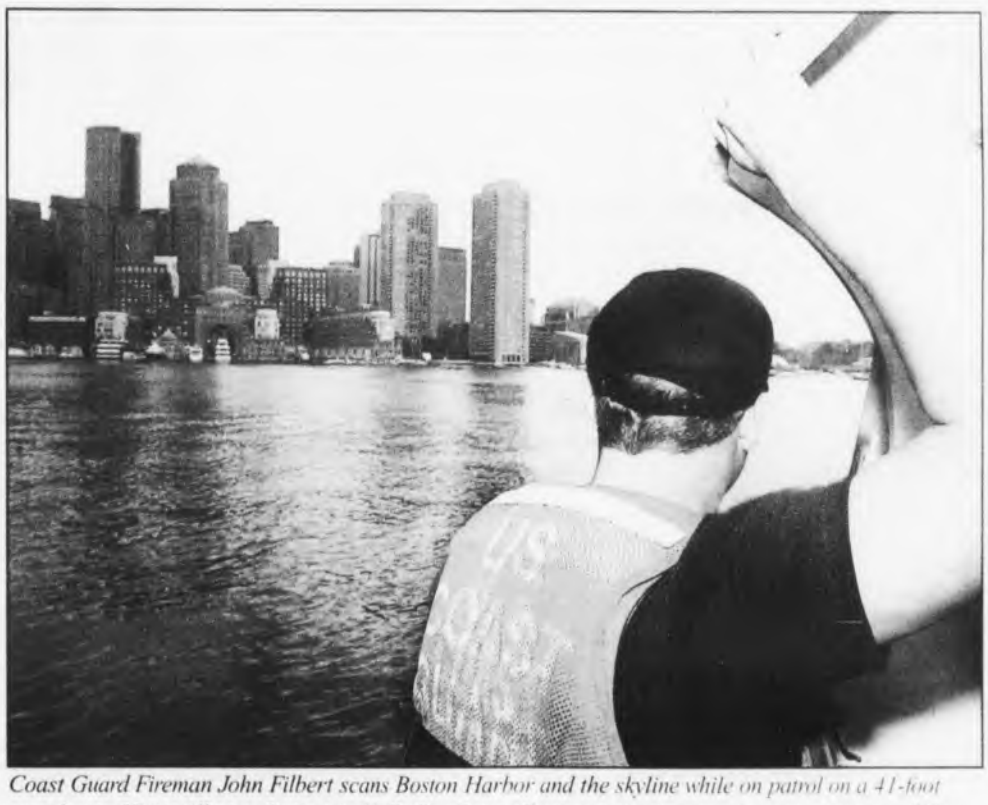
Seaman Dave Snyder looks out over the harbor as his Coast Guard patrol returns to Station Scituate on a sunny Sunday afternoon.

Editor's note



For a mariner in distress, there can be no more welcome sight than the red and blue stripes of a Coast Guard boat speeding to their rescue. Saving lives is a big part of what the Coast Guard does, but it is only one of many varied roles the men and women of the service play.

The smallest branch of the United States military has a vast number of duties – from search and rescue missions to maritime law enforcement and aids to navigation, to ice breaking, environmental protection and port security – more critical than ever since the terrorist attacks of September 11. And they conduct them all with honor and commitment continually living up to the Coast Guard motto "Semper Paratus—Always Ready."

On the South Shore the Coast Guard is our very good neighbor. With stations in Point Allerton and Scituate, the Coast Guard patrols the waters from Boston all the way to South Plymouth, ever vigilant and always prepared for duty.

We decided to get on board with the Coast Guard this summer to get a glimpse into what they do on a day to day basis and to learn how they continue to adjust to the changes and challenges that face this region, and this country in the post 9-11 era. We thank the Coast Guard personnel at both stations who graciously took us for a ride up and down the coast and helped us to better understand their mission.

Coast Guard depths

With its origins dating back to the 1790 creation of the Revenue Cutter Service established by Secretary of the Treasury Alexander Hamilton to protect the young nation's shipping from piracy and smugglers, the Coast Guard is the country's oldest continuous seagoing service.

A 1915 Act of Congress under President Woodrow Wilson combined the Revenue the Cutter Service and the United State Lifesaving Service into the Coast Guard which has been under the control of the Treasury Department, the Navy Department, the Department of Transportation and since March 2003 the Department of Homeland Security.

The smallest branch of the United States military has 38,000 active-duty men and women, 8,000 reservists and 35,000 members of the Auxiliary, a civilian wing of the Coast Guard.

On an average day nationwide the Coast Guard —

Conducts 109 search and rescue cases

Saves 10 lives and assists 192 people in distress

Protects $2,791,841 in property

Launches 396 small boat missions

Launches 164 aircraft missions, logging 324 hours

Boards 144 vessels

Seizes 169 pounds of marijuana and 306 pounds of cocaine worth $9,589,000

Intercepts 14 illegal migrants

Boards 100 large vessels for port safety checks

Training keeps Coast Guard always ready

By Elizabeth Malloy

By the time a bugle tune signaling the posting of the flag blares over the intercom system at the Point Allerton Coast Guard Station in Hull, the place has already been active for about two hours.

Chief Warrant Officer Paul Sordillo has already briefed the Coast Guardsmen and given them their assignments in a small conference room on the station's main floor; a radio operator has settled into the radio room for a 4-hour shift; and maintenance has begun on the station's four vessels.

On one misty, unseasonably cold morning on the last day of June this year, nearly all the officers and enlisted men greet each other with the same excited reminder: "It's sports day."

"Sports Day," an innovation of Boatswain's Mate 2nd Class Charlie McCoy to help the Coast Guard members of Point Allerton get more exercise and stay in shape, involves taking some time on Thursday afternoon to play basketball, volleyball or any game the courts on the station's ground allow for. The day is something everyone looks forward to and for which adjusts their schedules.

"We did all of our maintenance for today yesterday because today's sports day," said McCoy, 30, who serves as one of Point Allerton's Officers of the Day, one of several officers who are in charge of missions and other day-tot-day tasks for a day at a time while the Chief Warrant Officer deals with administrative tasks.

On a regular day, however, maintenance is a large part of the routine for Coast Guardsmen. Since September 11, 2001, the routine for the U.S. Coast Guard has changed somewhat since anti-terrorism became a bigger part of their job, but for the 51 men and 2 women who work at Point Allerton, the goal remains the same: to protect the shore line and enforce the federal laws of the United States along the coast south of Boston to Cape Cod. This job is completed on a typical day, by seemingly mundane tasks like taking care of their equipment and going on regular patrols.

The day begins with another bugle call, reveille, at 6 a.m. at Point Allerton. While 53 Coast Guardsmen are assigned to the station, they work in two-day rotating shifts — two days on and two days off — with half the group staying in the station's bunk area while the other half is off duty. From mid-May to mid-September, nine Coast Guardsmen from Point Allerton are stationed in Scituate Harbor, said Chief Warrant Officer Sordillo.

Machinery Technician Kurt Lautenslager fields a call in the radio room at Point Allerton in Hull. Point Allerton takes all calls and if necessary based on the location of the call, forwards them on to Station Scituate, which is staffed, seasonally from May to October.

"By 7 o'clock everyone has showered, eaten and they get down on the boats," said McCoy. "The first thing that starts at 7 in the morning is boat checks, every morning every single boat gets checked to make sure there isn't a single piece of equipment missing, make sure all of the systems work, all the electronics, the machine gear, just make sure everything's as it should be.

"Any discrepancies that are discovered during boat checks become top priority to fix because we need all of our boats ready to go at a moment's notice."

The Point Allerton Station has six boats, a 47-foot boat McCoy described as the station's "work horse" in the winter months, where it can handle 30-foot seas and re-right itself if tipped over. Then there are two 41-foot utility boats that have been in service for about 20 years and McCoy described as "jack of all trade" vessels because they can be used in nearly any mission. Finally, there are the newest boats, RSB's (Response Boat Small) 25-footers boats that only arrived at the station in the last few months. While they don't hold a large crew, they are very fast. The new vessels have been added as part of the Coast Guard's Homeland Security duties.

"After [boat checks] there's usually a general work list that the different departments have," McCoy said. "You have the deck department and the engineering department; engineering department, they deal almost exclusively with the machine spaces, the engines, stuff like that, the deck side they deal more with the boat outfit — the lines, the boats equipment, survival equipment,

Coast Guard enjoys strong relationship with local boaters

By Jillian Fennimore
JFENNIMO@CNC.COM

Sitting comfortably around a table inside a newly painted living room of Scituate's Coast Guard substation, three coastguardsmen laugh and trade stories about life on the sea, as a view of the harbor from a nearby window shows a thick fog moving in over the boats moored there.

"There are real people here," said Petty Officer 2nd Class Brian Hollowell about the Coast Guard's interaction with residents and visitors during the month-long stints at the small station.

While some consider it a vacation, or a brief change of scenery from their home base at Point Allerton Station in Hull, the Coast Guard personnel, who man the seasonal Scituate station from May through October, take the job of keeping mariners safe during the busy boating season very seriously.

Covering the coast from Scituate to South Plymouth, Coastguardsmen at the Scituate station rotate two-day shifts, with three men each day covering everything from search and rescue to law enforcement, homeland security operations, boater safety and education.

"You have to set yourself up for success," said Hollowell about the readiness of all Coast Guard personnel.

No matter how prepared the Coast Guard is, New England weather can be counted on to be unpredictable. The Coast Guard is ready for that, too.

When responding to local distress calls and getting underway on patrols, the Coast Guard is prepared for any type of weather. Boatswain's Mate 3rd Class Mike Shinners shows off an impressive stock of search and rescue equipment, including everything from flares, coastal tide books, first aid kits, and a state-of-the-art GPS — Global Positioning System.

"Our experience, combined with our tools puts everything together," said Shinners, who is also a qualified Emergency Medical Technician and formerly served in the Everett Fire Department.

As for the fallacy that coastguardsment never get seasick, Hollowell puts that to rest.

"Anyone who said that has never been in a 47-foot (Coast Guard) boat," said Hollowell.

In Scituate, he said they spend most of their time in a 25-foot boat, cruising local areas like Green Harbor, Brant Rock and all the way to the Pilgrim nuclear power plant in Plymouth to ensure boater safety and maintain homeland security.

The Coast Guard's responsibilities seem to be constantly growing, especially in the wakes of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on the country. Port security and more frequent patrols to maintain vigilance along the coast play a much larger role in the Coast Guard's day to day operations.

But there are slow times, too, he said, especially during the long winter season at Point Allerton. With recreational boaters on shore, the Coast Guard focuses attention on the safety of commercial fishermen most of whom work many miles away from shore on frigid waters, on their own.

"It's harder to educate commercial fishermen because they've been doing it for so long," said Hollowell. "In the dead of winter it's sort of hard to see the boats anyhow."

Rescues at that time of year present their own challenges as Jim Driskell, Boatswain's Mate 3rd class pointed out. During the winter, coastguardsmen have to chip off layers of ice from their boats and always have to change their dry suits since they turn white from the salt of the ocean.

"You have two inches of ice on your helmet and your suit hasn't moved," he said.

Despite those challenges, getting to boaters in distress as quickly as possible, particularly in the winter months is crucial. That was abundantly evident in last February's fire aboard the fishing vessel Lady Lorraine. Another fishing boat — the Night Moves — reached the 44-foot Lady Lorraine before the Coast Guard and was able to save two of the three crew members on board. The third, 21-year-old Michael O'Connor was lost at sea after the boat sank. After conducting 17-hour search over 500 square miles the Coast Guard suspended the search for O'Connor, whose body washed ashore at Peggotty Beach 11 days after the accident.

"Life is the first priority," said Shinners, about the Coast Guard's search and rescue responsibilities.

In terms of battling a boat fire, coastguardsmen at the Scituate station agreed they would only suppress a fire to save a life.

"We are not firefighters," said Driskell.

Traveling at 45 knots—about 52 MPH—on a sunnier day, when recreational boaters take to the water in droves, another crew cruises out of Scituate Harbor and into the open water on patrol. The crew waves to boaters they pass by and seem to have a sort of celebrity status.

Crashing into waves at full speed, the three coastguardsmen, two inside the cabin and one outside holding on for safety, say they have come to like the local connections they have made.

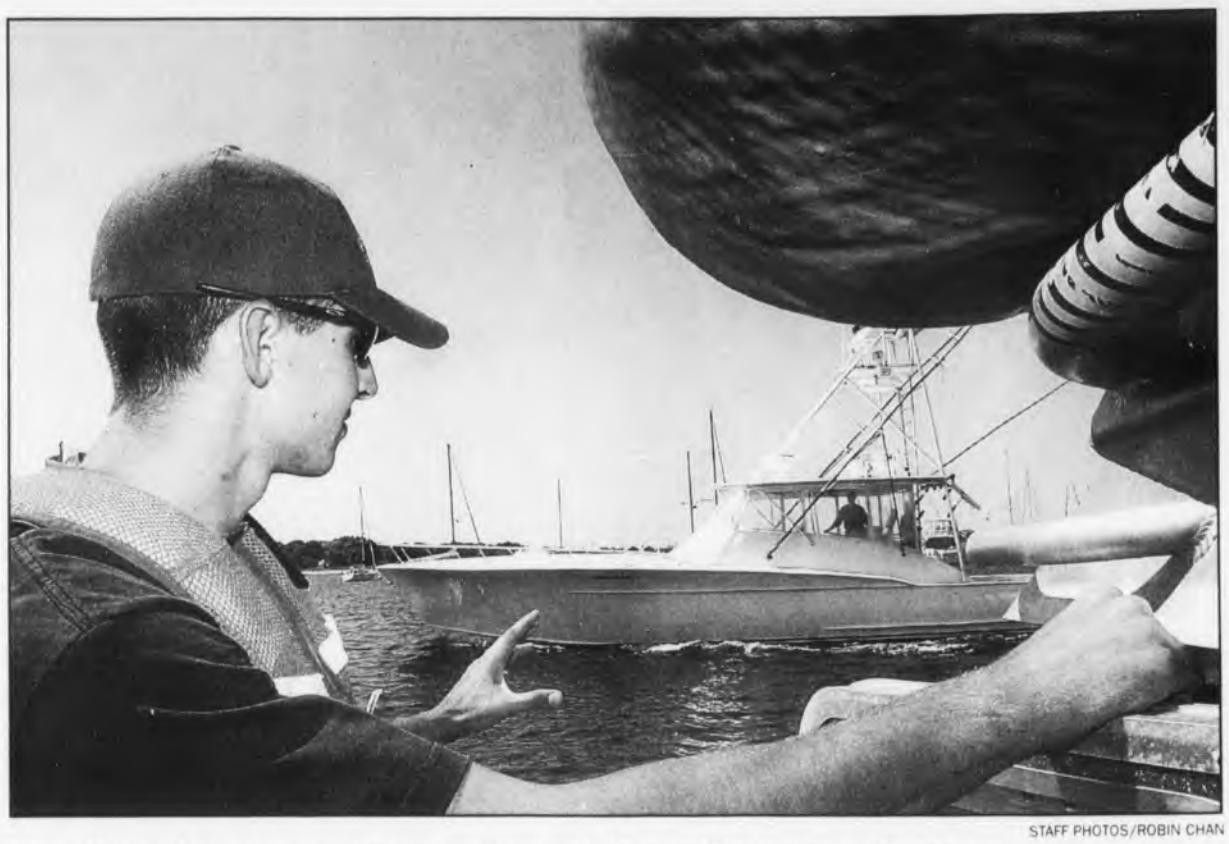
"The Coast Guard is one of the best services to be in," said Wayne Lougee, Boatswain 2nd class.

"You get to interact with the civilians," added Tom McIntrye, Boatswain's mate 3rd class.

While they are there to enforce boating laws, the coastguardsmen have a cordial relationship with local mariners as evidenced by a friendly conversation they strike up with some boaters fueling their vessels in Scituate Harbor.

They also work well with members of the Coast Guard Auxiliary, a civilian arm of the service that on this day comes by to check on some people who have fallen off their Jetskis.

A big part of their mission is to ensure safe boating making sure boaters have life jackets and fire extinguishers aboard. They also keep an eye out for underage drinking and overcrowded boats as these can also be serious hazards on the water.



According to Lougee, some boaters automatically think they may be in trouble when the coastguardsmen ride by, or execute a random boarding of a vessel.

"It's like being on the highway and seeing a state trooper," he said.

During the summer season, much of their time patrolling is spent in highly populated areas including Plymouth Harbor, the New Inlet and the Scituate beach known as "the Spit," where bathers and boaters crowd the shore and the nearby sandbar.

Armed in any matter with shotguns, flares, and knives, the coastguardsmen rely just as much one another and the camaraderie they have built through their service.

"No matter how good a coxswain (boat commander) thinks they are, they are only as good as their crew," said Hollowell.

stuff like that."

The morning usually continues with daily maintenance, fixing and upgrading equipment, then there's a break for lunch, and then the afternoon continues in much the same way, McCoy said. While the tasks seem routine, McCoy said it's all in anticipation of getting a call for a mission.

"Throughout the day, 24/7 we're always available for SAR, or search and rescue, and that obviously is unscheduled and comes at a moment's notice," he said. "We also have our escorts, we're involved with LNG (Liquid Nitrogen Gas) tanker escorts, we also do boardings in the area where we conduct safety boardings on vessels in the area, including taking law enforcement action if we get a call."

The Coast Guard's law enforcement responsibilities are what separates it from the other branches of the armed forces. When referring to the military, people often think of the Army, Navy, Marines and Air Force, excluding the Coast Guard, but McCoy said the Coast Guard is as much a branch of the armed forces as any of the others - albeit the smallest branch.

Members do eight weeks of basic training in Cape May, New Jersey and the Coast Guard Academy is located in New London, Connecticut. McCoy said the main difference between the Coast Guard and other military branches is that they fall under the Department of Homeland Security rather than the Department of Defense. This is because if the Coast Guard were to carry out law enforcement duties such as boarding vessels for searches while working under the Department of Defense, these duties would be considered acts of war under US law.

Since the start of the war in Iraq, one member of the Coast Guard has died. McCoy explained most Coast Guardsmen serving overseas are reservists. Those on active duty are assigned to area waterways and harbors and known them very well.

Most of the men and women at Point Allerton are from the New England area and chose the station to be close to home. Though more popular stations are in places like Florida, California and Hawaii, McCoy said. McCoy is from St. Louis and said there is a small Coast Guard presence along the Mississippi River, but he mostly became interested when he got a job in Boston.

When he was laid off a year later, McCoy said he initially looked into the Coast Guard Reserve but then decided to enlist. McCoy said the educational benefits are what really drew him in.

"You can't beat the benefits of getting a master's degree for free," he said. "The education benefits are a big draw for a lot of people."

Money for college is also what drew in Seaman E3 Brian Morrarty, 23, who said he joined the Coast Guard because, "I didn't know what to go to college for and I didn't have the money to go, so I decided to join the service, get the GI Bill and make some money and it would give me a chance to figure out what I wanted to do."

A native of Connecticut, Morrarty is one of the local members of the Point Allerton staff who braves the nasty winters to be closer to home. Aside from the harsh winters, Boston also lacks some of the more intriguing duties of the Coast Guard like chasing down drug runners, as not many of them come this far north by boat, said McCoy, who chased drug traffickers while off the coast of central America. In his four years with the Coast Guard Morrarty said the most interesting rescues he's been involved with were two boats that sank and a twin engine airplane that went down off the coast of Nahant.

Though they may not often see it, the Coast Guardsmen of Point Allerton spend a lot of time training for the worst.

"We plan for large disasters, especially in the Logan [Airport] area, not to mention all the commuter vessels, there's a lot of commuter traffic going throughout [Boston] Harbor," McCoy said. "Fortunately we haven't had to deploy those skills yet."

Much of their daily routine now involves homeland security such as escorting LNG tankers through Boston Harbor, or law enforcement like boarding fishing boats to make sure they're complying with fisheries laws. McCoy said before September 11, one Coast Guard boat would guard LNG tankers going through the harbor, now four Coast Guard boats, 2 Massachusetts State Police boats, Boston Police and Massachusetts Environmental Police all escort the tankers, as well as a Coast Guard helicopter.

While the southeastern coast of Massachusetts is patrolled by many different agencies, McCoy said the Coast Guard and local agencies work well together to keep the area safe.

"It's just like on land, Boston Police's authority on land is Boston, so they're the authority on the water of Boston, then you have Quincy, they have authority on Quincy, then you have the State Police, they have authority in the entire state, but Boston is enforcing local laws, state police are enforcing state laws, we're all federal," McCoy said. "All we care about is federal laws."

When it comes to enforcing federal fishing laws, making sure fisherman take in the right amounts of catch, maintaining the property safety protocols, McCoy said most local fishermen are understanding and the Coast Guardsmen try to be as non-invasive as possible.

"If they're in the middle of reeling in their catch we try to let them continue doing that," McCoy said. "But they're the ones that are also out on the water more than anybody else and that's why it's really important to make sure that they are equipped properly in case something does happen, because not only are they out the most, they're also the ones that will go out in bad weather because that's their job so they're always at a higher risk."

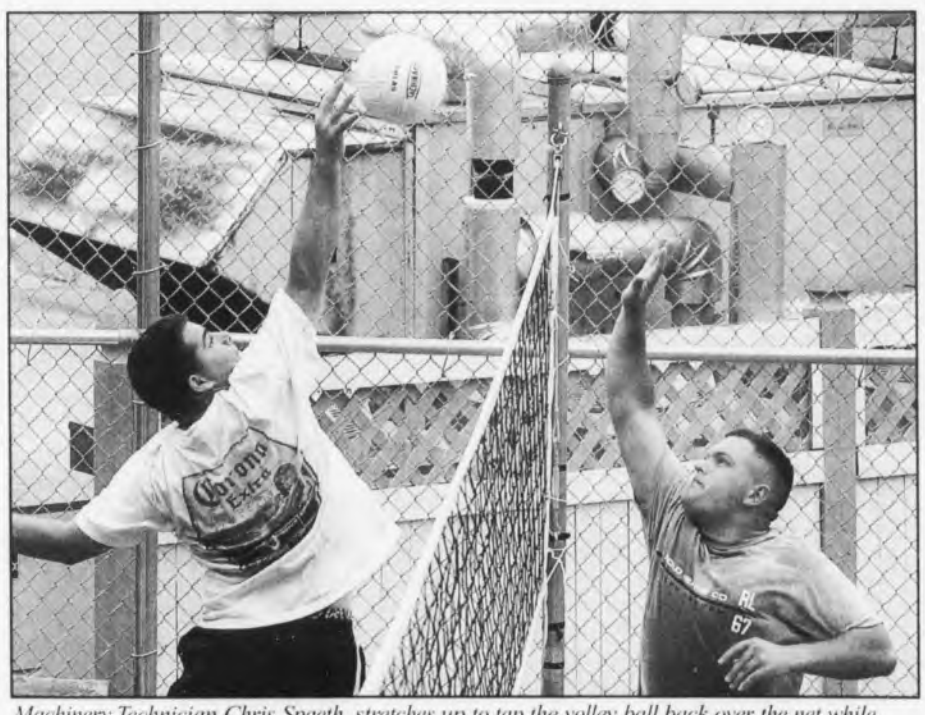
"Half the time you'll see them out there with only one person on board," added Morrarty. "If something happened no one would ever know."

To go out on patrol, one of the larger boats at Point Allerton needs to have at least three people on board: someone to pilot the boat, an assistant and an engineer to look after any equipment problems that could arise. Upon returning to Point Allerton after a tour of Boston Harbor with McCoy and Morrarty, Fireman E3 John Filbert, 22, of Rhode Island, a Coast Guard engineer, disappeared down a manhole sized hatch near the stern of the vessel and crawled into a 2-foot wide space to check out the engine.

Morrarty said he and most members of the Coast Guard have a lot of respect for the engineers, both because they need to know everything about the mechanics and electrical components of the ships and because they frequently have to work on those components in difficult conditions out on the seas while wearing all their gear, including a bulky life jacket.

Back at Point Allerton, though the ship was docked and it was a cool day, Filbert said checking the engine still isn't easy.

"It's hard because it's hot down there," he said. He then added with a laugh: "It's not much fun."



When on duty as Officer of the Day, McCoy sometimes has to wake up a crew in the middle of the night to go out onto stormy seas for a search and rescue mission. He said he always tries to wake up the best crew he can find.

"In the winter we're dressed for windchills of 30 below," he said. "When you're in really rough seas it's really taxing physically and mentally."

Coast Guardsmen are trained in their jobs while working, Morrarty said. While many days, such as the cloudy and chilly day last June are slow, others are more busy, involving the rescue of stranded boaters and acting on intelligence about possible terrorist threats.

"No two days are a like," Morrarty said. "You never really know what's going to happen."

Some days, you might even spend the afternoon playing volleyball.

Machinery Technician Chris Spaeth, stretches up to tap the volley ball back over the net while BM3 (Boatswains Mate 3rd Class) Daniel Pettit prepares to block the shot during "Sports Day" at Coast Guard Station Point Allerton. Sports Day has been implemented to encourage physical activity and build camaraderie among the Coast Guard personnel.

Semper Paratus

Semper Paratus – Always Ready, is the Coast Guard's motto and the title for the service's song.

While the origin of the motto is unknown the words for the song based on it were penned in 1922 by Capt. Francis Saltus Van Boskerck while aboard the cutter Yamacraw in Savannah, Georgia. Van Boskerck composed the music five years later in the hopes the Coast Guard's motto would become as well known and recognized as the Marine's Semper Fidelis and the Navy's song Anchors Away.

First verse:
From Aztec shore to Arctic zone,
To Europe and Far East.
The Flag is carried by our ships,
In times of war and peace.
And never have we struck it yet,
In spite of foe-men's might,
Who cheered our crews and cheered again,
For showing how to fight.
Chorus:
So here's the Coast Guard marching song,
We sing on land or sea.
Through surf and storm and howling gale,
High shall our purpose be.
"Semper Paratus" is our guide,
Our fame, and glory too.
To fight to save or fight to die
Aye! Coast Guard, we are for you!

History shows origins of service spawned on South Shore

Without exaggeration, Scituate can claim to be one of the birthplaces of the American search and rescue system of saving mariners from distress at sea.

As early as 1691, King D. Pedro II of Portugal issued an edict to the masters of all coastal forts in that country to do everything under their power to aid shipwrecked sailors within their immediate area. Other countries followed suit with this notion, from China to England, and it was an Englishman, a blind physician named Noyes, that brought the notion to the new United States in 1785.

In the first meeting of the Humane Society of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts on January 5, 1786, at the Bunch of Grapes Tavern in Boston, the subscribers of the organization met to discuss, among other topics, "the recovery of persons who meet with such accidents as produce in them the appearance of death." After the distribution of a pamphlet describing methods preferred for the restoration of those "apparently drowned," the society's next move was to build small houses of refuge for mariners to seek in times of crisis. Each "hut" was supplied with basic survival goods: blankets, dry clothing, firewood and matches, water, etc. In an 1810 "Appendix of Huts Erected by the Humane Society," three are listed as being built in 1787, "One on Scituate beach, One on the outer beach of Nantasket, One on the west end of Lovell's Island." Nowhere else in America had such steps yet been taken to aid shipwrecked sailors.

The Humane Society took the next step in the development of the search and rescue system in 1807 by constructing a lifeboat in Nantucket and having it placed in Cohasset. This achievement allowed local volunteers to pursue active lifesaving methods, charging through the surf to reach endangered sailors before their ships wrecked rather than waiting for those ships to slam ashore, forcing the sailors to fend for themselves. The lifeboat remained in Cohasset until 1813, but then disappears from all inventory rolls.

Three successive winter storms in December 1839 struck the Massachusetts coast, killing hundreds of sailors, and leaving hundreds more widows and orphans. The Society applied to the state government for help in constructing more lifeboat stations like the short-lived one in Cohasset in the early part of the century. In April 1840, the state legislature sent a communication to the Board of Trustees of the Humane Society, a resolve passed on March 21, providing, "That there be allowed and paid out of the Treasury of the Commonwealth, to the President and Trustees of the Massachusetts Humane Society, the sum of five thousand dollars, for the purpose of furnishing Life Boats to be stationed at the most exposed parts of the seacoast within this Commonwealth..." In a letter dated January 4, 1841, the Society informed the legislature that eleven boats had been constructed and placed appropriately from Plum Island to Martha's Vineyard, including one "on Scituate Beach, which will be paid for by the Massachusetts Humane Society."

Local volunteers manned the stations under the unofficial motto, "I'd like to think if I was the one that was out there, someone would come for me."

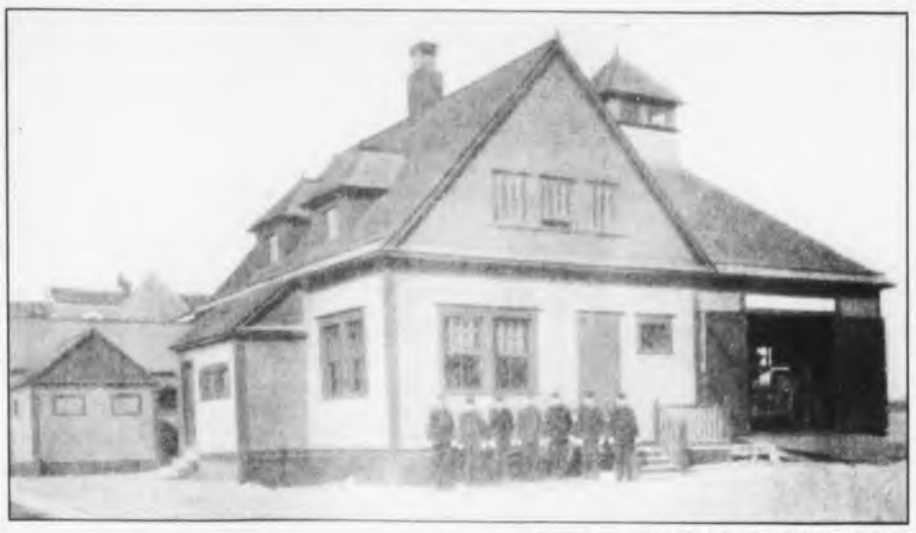
A federal system of lifesaving, based on the Massachusetts Humane Society model, roughly formed in 1848 with the appropriation of $5,000 by Congress for "surfboats, rockets and carronades" to be placed on dangerous stretches of coastline in the northeast, most on the approach to New York Harbor. This system more or less fell apart during the Civil War, as coastal trading in that area slowed, allowing vandals to have their way with the equipment placed inside the first lifeboat and mortar stations. The Massachusetts Humane Society system, though, had reached what historian Mark Anthony DeWolfe Howe called its "Golden Years."

In 1869, the Society listed lifeboat stations at Point Allerton in Hull, Cohasset Harbor, Pleasant Beach in Cohasset, North Scituate Neck (station 23, under Keeper H.H. Sylvester, Fourth Cliff (27, John Tilden), Bass Cove (24, T.C. Bates), and the Cut River in Marshfield. T.C. Bates also oversaw a surfboat – smaller and lighter than a lifeboat – at Bass Cove (station 25) and had assumed control of a metallic surfboat at Scituate Harbor (station 26). John Tilden also had charge of a house of refuge near Fourth Cliff. In 1856, H.T. Studley had taken charge of a surfboat at "Glades House" (station 22). Local volunteers manned the stations under the unofficial motto, "I'd like to think if I was the one that was out there, someone would come for me."

In 1871, the national scene changed forever, with the reformation of the United States Life-Saving Service under new General Superintendent Sumner Increase Kimball. A new wave of lifeboat station building took place, with nine stations constructed on Cape Cod that year alone. Eight years later, in 1879, a year after the service took the dramatic step of disassociating itself from the Revenue Cutter Service and standing as its own body under the Department of the Treasury, Scituate's first federal lifesaving station was constructed at Fourth Cliff. Keeper Frederick Stanley, for whom the Sea Street Bridge to Humarock is now named, took charge as keeper. His number one surfman, 38-year old Civil War veteran George H. Brown, took command of the new North Scituate station when it opened in 1886. Young Thomas Maddock, later to be keeper of the Merrimac River station in Newburyport, served under Brown at North Scituate.

The lifesavers of the North Scituate and Fourth Cliff stations followed the drills and procedures instituted by the service nationwide. Mondays and Thursdays they practiced with their beach apparatus, firing their Lyle guns and erecting a rope bridge from a pole mimicking a ship's mast in order to practice the breeches buoy drill. Tuesdays they performed capsize drills with their lifeboats, and on Fridays they practiced resuscitating drowning victims. Saturdays they cleaned the stations, and Sundays they went to church and rested.

They marched patrols every night for ten months of the year, taking the months of June and July off, when the weather for the most part had little effect on shipping. The lifesavers of North Scituate marched north to the Glades and a keypost, and south to Scituate Harbor, where they met their Fourth Cliff counterparts. Until November 26, 1898, the Fourth Cliff lifesavers crossed the barrier beach between Third and Fourth Cliffs on their march north. That pathway was closed to them forever when the Portland Gale enraged the North River to the point it blew that beach away. Marching south, they stopped at Rexhame Beach, where, until 1898 the North River flowed out to sea.



The Scituate lifesavers braved their share of storms and saved more than their share of lives, from the brig T. Remick in 1889, to the schooner Nantasket in 1909, and beyond. In 1915, their service merged again with the Revenue Cutter Service, under President William Howard Taft's call for "unifunctionalism" in the federal government, the new entity being called the United States Coast Guard. In 1919, the Fourth Cliff station burned down, never to be replaced. Its lot at 12 River Street still remains open today. The North Scituate station, now a private residence on Surfside Road, remained as the local Coast Guard station into the 1930s, fighting the war on rumrunners alone along the Scituate coastline.

In the 1930s, the Coast Guard undertook another wide scale station building program, updating many of the old stations of the Life-Saving Service. Land purchased on First Cliff provided room for the construction of a "Roosevelt-type" Colonial Revival design station that housed as many as 40 Coast Guardsmen during World War II. From here the Coast Guard responded to the famed March 17, 1956 stranding of the Italian freighter Etrusco.

As new technologies in both boat design and communications evolved, the need for the close proximity of stations lessened. The Humane Society shut down its lifesaving operations in the 1940s, realizing that the federal service had the mission well in hand. Watchstanders in cupolas and free standing watchtowers eventually were replaced by radar screens. And the old, six-to-eight man wooden pulling boats gave way to 36-foot, then 44-foot and eventually 47-foot motor lifeboats.

In 1967, the Coast Guard moved from the Department of Treasury to the Department of Transportation. In 1997, the Coast Guard underwent what it called a "right-sizing" transformation, politically correct for "downsizing" due to budget cuts. The large station on First Cliff, without its cupola (lost in a 1984 fire), prepared to be shut down in favor of a smaller station deeper in the harbor. That building today serves as the home of the Stellwagen Bank National Marine Sanctuary's staff of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. The Coast Guard crew of Station-Scituate now operates from roughly May 15 to October 15, as a substation of Station-Point Allerton in Hull, one of the largest small boat Coast Guard stations in the country.

Scituate's history with organized lifesaving of mariners in distress at sea is as long and involved as in any community in America. From its volunteer days shortly after the American Revolution through the modern war on terror and the service's transfer to the Department of Homeland Security, mariners off Scituate's shores have always been protected in some form from disasters at sea, with several recent incidents with loss of life indicating the need for year-round Coast Guard presence. As local, national and international forces dictate, the presence of the Coast Guard in Scituate will continue to evolve.

In the Coast Guard's corner

Delahunt advocates for more funding and year-round coverage

By Jillian Fennimore
JFENNIMO@CNC.COM

It's "one brick at a time" for U.S. Rep. William Delahunt, D-Quincy, as he looks down the road toward improving the Coast Guard service, which he claims is both underfunded and understaffed.

Delahunt would like to see small boat stations, like the one in Scituate now manned by Coast Guard personnel only during the boating season from May through October, occupied year-round to better protect boaters and keep emergency response times to a minimum.

"The Coast Guard is a priority for me," he said about his commitment to reviewing station scale back issues. "We have to keep at it."

The cutbacks in Scituate date back to 1997. Funding issues and a prevailing view that the larger station at Point Allerton in Hull could provide coverage for Scituate and other South Shore communities led to the reduced and seasonal presence.

The original year-round station building on Edward Foster Road is now occupied by That building today serves as the home of the Stellwagen Bank National Marine Sanctuary's staff of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and a smaller crew has moved into tighter quarters five months of the year in a Coast Guard building next door to the Scituate Harbormaster's Office.

The Coast Guard is near and dear to Delahunt, who served from 1963 until 1971. Delaunt formed the first-ever Congressional boating caucus nine years ago to address the need for more resources and funding for the Coast Guard, to raise its profile and maintain its one "core mission" of search and rescue.

"We've learned through experience that response time to disasters at sea whether in a small boat or a fishing vessel is absolutely critical," he said.

That is especially true in the winter and early spring when water temperatures are near freezing and a victim in the water has only minutes before hypothermia sets in.

In the past few years there have been at least two incidents involving boating accidents in Scituate waters during the Coast Guard's off-season in Scituate.

In April 2001, 18-year-old Bridgewater resident Steven Hockey drowned after the boat he and his stepbrother James Burke were in, capsized in the North River near the New Inlet. John Kasper, a Third Cliff resident heard their cries for help and raced out to them in his kayak but was only able to pull Burke to his safety.

And just last February a blaze aboard the 44-foot fishing vessel the Lady Lorraine five miles off Scituate Harbor claimed the life of 21-year-old Michael O'Connor. The boat's owner Brainerd Ames and his nephew Stephen Lydon survived the fire and the frigid waters after being rescued by the crew of another fishing boat – the Night Moves" which saw the billowing smoke from shore and was able to speed out to the Lady Lorraine within minutes. It takes the Coast Guard at Point Allerton more than a half-hour to reach Scituate in good weather – which is rare during a New England winter. Making matters worse, the fire broke out a half-hour after the Scituate Harbormaster's office closed making the crew's situation even more dire. Many close to the victims in the Lady Lorraine accident believe had the Scituate station been open, all three crew members might have been rescued. The Lady Lorraine sank and the Coast Guard searched for O'Connor for 17-hours, covering 500 square miles, to no avail. His body washed ashore 11 days later at Peggotty Beach, two days before the memorial Mass in his honor.

Both cases, Delahunt said show the crucial need to secure funding for small stations to be staffed year-round so the Coast Guard can address emergencies in a more timely fashion.

"I will continue to advocate and ensure that the Scituate station stays open," he said.

Delahunt has his hands full right now, as he battles to keep Otis Air National Guard Base — which is connected to Coast Guard Air Station Cape Cod — open. Otis and several other New England military installations have been targeted for closure and are included on the BRAC Base Realignment and Closure Commission's list.

According to Delahunt said the closing of Otis would have a great impact on the US Coast Guard if plans follow through for the 102nd Fighter Interceptor Wing to be reassigned to New Jersey and Florida.

Pentagon officials claim $10 million a year can be saved by moving the 102nd, but reports from the U.S. General Accounting Office indicate the federal government would have to enhance budgets of other Otis tenants, like the Coast Guard air station, to keep the base — with its waste treatment plant, waterworks, utilities and roadway structure — operating and secure.

On Aug. 1, Mass Development, which has been working with the Save Otis group, will present its case to BRAC to spare all Massachusetts bases. Otis, however, will be the primary focus.

"This decision was made without consulting the Coast Guard," Delahunt said about the financial impacts the service would face to maintain the base, with a possibility of jeopardizing the future of their presence on the Cape. "The savings (in this case) are really false."

"There is not a more perfect location than Otis in terms of the U.S. Coast Guard Air Station," he said, adding that the station's area of responsibility ranges from the Canadian border to New Jersey.

With the Coast Guard's transferal to the Department of Homeland Security, its duties and mission have also grown. Resources must be met in this case for their increased multi-tasking, Delahunt said, like finding the funds to update equipment and vessels.

This is of outmost importance for both the Coast Guard and those serving in it as well, according to Delahunt's Chief of Staff Steve Schwadron.

"This puts the safety of the Coastguardsmen themselves in danger," he said about the aging fleet.

"We have to do better by them," Delahunt said.

A Coast Guard Auxiliary boat scans the water of the crowded New Inlet on a sunny Sunday afternoon. The civilian arm of the serivice assists the Coast Guard in non-law enforcement capacities including search and rescue, vessel checks and safety patrols. The New Inlet and the popular sandbar the "Spit" are areas frequently patrolled by the Coast Guard during its season in Scituate from May to October.

Smooth sailing

Cooperation between harbormasters and Coast Guard ensures safety

By Elizabeth Malloy

Officers in the Plymouth Harbormaster's office patrol 36 miles of coast line and deal with everything from enforcing environmental laws to rescuing boaters in distress. While they have everything they need with 20 highly trained men and four equipped vessels, Harbormaster Tim Routhier said they're comforted by knowing they can always get assistance from the US Coast Guard.

"We work hand in hand," Routhier said of the Coast Guard. "Anything we need assistance with they come help, and anything they need assistance with we help them."

Routhier echoed the sentiments of Harbormasters up and down the coast from Boston to Plymouth who say while they often patrol the same waters as the Coast Guard and respond to the same calls, the agencies never get in each others way.

"The Harbormasters around here are really good at what they do, they make our job a lot easier because they know the area," said Boatswain's Mate 2nd Class Charlie McCoy of the Point Allerton Coast Guard Station in Hull. "They're really good at monitoring the radios as well for help and they also are very efficient because they respond really quickly when called for help."

Point Allerton's personnel covers the coast from Boston Harbor to the Cape Cod Canal and 50 miles out to sea, McCoy said, conducting patrols and search and rescue missions. He agreed with the Harbormasters that while they sometimes share the water, they work together rather than get in each other's way.

From mid-May to October, a small seasonal Coast Guard station operates out of Scituate Harbor with a staff of 9 men, but for the rest of the year, Point Allerton is the only station serving South Shore. There is a station in the Cape Cod Canal but Routhier said they do not respond above South Plymouth.

This distance from Hull to the southern most portions of the district makes quick response by the Coast Guard difficult. Last February when the fishing vessel Lady Lorraine caught fire five miles off Scituate Harbor, another fishing boat was first on the scene to help rescue two of the three crew members. Complicating matters further, the Scituate Harbormaster's office closed at 4 p.m. that day, a half-hour before the boat blaze imperiled its crew.

The boat sank and one of the Lady Lorraine's crew, 22-year-old Michael O'Connor was lost in the incident. McCoy said the long response time from Point Allerton to certain points of the South Shore (about 45 minutes to Scituate) is regrettable but unavoidable, especially in bad weather, and that's where having well-trained harbormaster's and assistant harbormasters on duty is important. Depending on weather conditions, McCoy said it can take patrols up to an hour to reach an area as far south as Green Harbor in Marshfield.

"If we need assistance from them, we'll call them and they always help and if they need assistance from us they always call and we try to help any way we can," McCoy said. "I think we've done a pretty good job of maintaining a good working relationship."

Scituate Assistant Harbormaster Mark Patterson said the Coast Guard and Harbormasters don't get in each other's way because they have different jurisdictions. The Harbormasters enforce local laws and the Coast Guard enforces federal laws. The Scituate Harbormaster's office covers a wide distance, from the tip of Humarock up to Strawberry Point, as well as the North, South and Herring Rivers and 3 miles out to sea, so Patterson said they appreciate having the Coast Guard's help.

"We have a good working relationship with the Coast Guard, especially the guys who are stationed here during the summer," Patterson said.

Routhier recalled a recent incident in Plymouth in which there was a medical emergency on a Capt. John whale watching boat. Routhier, a licensed paramedic, called the Coast Guard, which arrived in one of its faster vessels and hitched a ride with them to Capt. John Boat, escorting him back to his office after he had responded to the emergency on board.

"We've had a couple incidents [that involved the Coast Guard] already this year, search and rescues," Routhier said. He recalled a case earlier this year where a man went over the side of his boat and Coast Guard helicopters were used in the search. The man's body was eventually found in Duxbury. Routhier said there was also a suicide on a boat that the Coast Guard helped his department investigate this year.

"Whatever they need I'll do for them and I know they'll do anything for me," Routhier said of the Coast Guard. "We don't fight over jurisdiction, we just work together."

The one that got away

Maddock made his mark on Life Saving Service

By John Galluzzo
CORRESPONDENT

Any real fisherman will tell you about the time that he let the big one get away. He got it hooked, reeled it in, almost losing his footing in the boat, and held it for just a moment, but just as he reached for his camera, the monstrous fish thrashed and drove the hook through his hand. Yelping out a sharp expletive as he clasped his bleeding palm, the fisherman swore that he could see the fish smiling at him as it dove for the safety of the ocean's depths.

In 1897, the town of Scituate watched as one of their biggest fish, Surfman Thomas John Maddock, swam away.

Born to a commission in the Royal Navy in Waterford County, Ireland, Thomas' father John Thomas Maddock ran away from home at age twelve after a heated argument with his father. Immediately signing on to an English ship as a cabin boy, he set out for the sea. When that vessel tied up in Boston, he signed on to another for a two-year voyage, and soon found that the sea would be where he felt most comfortable, and where he would spend the bulk of his life.

Before the outbreak of the Civil War, John met and married Katherine Murdock, a native of Bristol, England, just across the water from his hometown in Ireland. Relocating from Boston to North Scituate, they built a home and started a family. Together they had two sons, Thomas and Alonzo, and two daughters, Jennie and Laura.

Born August 8, 1859, some of Thomas John Maddock's earliest memories concerned his father's returning home from his many months away at sea. "The children looked forward to their father's return from his long voyages. He always had little souvenirs from foreign ports hidden away in his ditty bag. When the time was near for his arrival, Laura would shinny up the flag pole where she could see her father turn down the lane toward the house. When he appeared she would slide to the ground and race up the lane to be the first to greet him." Before his children were fully grown, John tired of the long, lonely days and nights on the open ocean, and traded in his ditty bag for a Boston Harbor pilot's license.

At 24 years old, on January 10, 1884, Thomas married 18-year old Florence Mabel Cushman of Scituate, the ceremony being performed by the Reverend L. P. Causey. Two months later on March 26 their first son, Richie Snow, was born. Two years later, on April 7, 1886, Willard Cushman Maddock, a second son, entered the world.

Faced with a growing family and the need to obtain a steady, reliable paycheck, Thomas left the life of a carpenter behind and signed up to be a surfman at the North Scituate United States Life-Saving Service station on March 1, 1887, where he would learn the trade under newly-appointed Keeper George H. Brown.

With ten years of lifesaving experience along the Scituate shores behind him, including the rescue of the crew of the brig T. Remick in 1889, Maddock accepted the post as keeper of the Merrimac River Life-Saving Service station in Newburyport.

Described by Margaret Cole Bonney in Scituate's Sands of Time as being "5 feet 4 inches tall" and "of dark complexion with black hair" and blue eyes, Maddock put his "knack of putting things together...shown in many fine pieces of workmanship around the station" to good use for the benefit of his life-saving brethren, or at least he tried to do so. By 1894, already a veteran of seven years of patrolling the beaches of Scituate, Maddock presented two inventions to the United States Life-Saving Service's Board of Life-Saving Appliances that he felt would help to lighten the surfman's load.

The Board's official report on Maddock's patrolman's signal case described it as being "made of stout leather...4 1/2 inches long, 1 1/2 inches wide, and 3 1/2 inches deep. It is fitted with straps for suspension from the shoulder or the waist of the wearer. The interior is divided into compartments for holding two signals, and there is a place for the signal holder or firing appliance. A device of similar material for the same purpose, although much larger and heavier, was adapted some time ago, but gradually fell into disuse, because the leather, when wet, damaged the signals rather than protected them. The Board is of the opinion that the tin cases now used give general satisfaction and that the introduction of the Maddock case seems to be unnecessary." (Annual Report of the United States Life-Saving Service, 1894, p. 427).

Undaunted by the Board's rejection of his first proposed labor-saving device, Maddock tried again in 1899 with a belt and holder for the Coston flares. "This belt is intended to be worn on the outside of the clothing. It carries a Coston signal holder and two copper Coston-light cases. While this device shows ingenuity in construction and simplicity in operation, the experience of the board has been that if worn on the outside of the clothing there would be a liability, in stormy and freezing weather, of the holder becoming so clogged with ice or frozen snow that it would be impossible to use it without first thawing it out. The separate copper case, for the protection of the signal lights when carried in the pocket, is of the same size and construction as the tin cases now in use, and does not possess any great advantage over them. The Board is of the opinion that it would not be advised to recommend the adoption of either of these articles." (Annual Report of the United Life-Saving Service, 1899, p. 478).

Although he found himself turned away by the Board of Life-Saving Appliances, Maddock by 1897 had impressed at least one important official, Superintendent of the Second Life-Saving District, Benjamin C. Sparrow, who made him one of the first beneficiaries of the Service's adoption of Civil Service rules the previous year.

From its very beginning, the USLSS held a practice of hiring lifeboat captains and crews from the populations nearest the stations, to allay fears that would otherwise arise concerning visible federal government presence in small coastal communities. That system, though, eventually faltered, as keeper's appointments became political favors, and many imperiled seamen soon found their lives to be in the hands of untested, unskilled, and in some cases downright-afraid-to-launch-a-boat lifesavers. In 1896, after reconsidering the Service's hiring and promotion practices, General Superintendent Sumner Increase Kimball announced the immediate implementation of Civil Service standards. Promotion from surfman to keeper would henceforth be determined by merit, and would be made on a district-wide basis.

Thomas and Florence had brought five more children into the world since he had joined the USLSS. With all of those mouths to feed, Maddock could hardly afford to turn opportunity and Superintendent Sparrow away when they came knocking. With ten years of lifesaving experience along the Scituate shores behind him, including the rescue of the crew of the brig T. Remick in 1889, Maddock accepted the post as keeper of the Merrimac River Life-Saving Service station in Newburyport, Scituate watched as their big one got away and swam clear across Boston Harbor.

Maddock spent twenty-two years in control of the Merrimac River station, becoming one of the most well-known citizens of that area, retiring in 1919. Heeding the advice of his father concerning family relations ("Guard your temper well, for mine has cost me dearly!"), he turned the station into a social center, training his sons and nephews to man the building during the summer breaks, and leading sing-a-longs on the banjo and cello, always sharing the company of two or three St. Bernard dogs, the patrolmen's best friends. After his retirement he built "Bonnyview" cottage, furnished with rugs made from his beloved St. Bernards and a distinctly discernible entryway, marked by an archway formed of two whale ribs still attached to their vertebra, known as "Captain Maddock's Wishbone." There he spent his remaining years with his second wife, Alice Hawthorne.

Thomas John Maddock died on July 4, 1945, and was buried in full dress uniform in West Concord, NH, the hometown of his wife, Alice. Were it not for the introduction of the Civil Service rules into the USLSS, Maddock may well have eventually taken over the North Scituate or Fourth Cliff station. Instead, he traded South Shore for North Shore, another Scituate native who succeeded in life, but made his mark outside of the town's borders.

A tough act to follow

CORRESPONDENT

The unexpected death of Captain Joshua James, keeper of the Point Allerton United States Life-Saving Service Station in Hull, on March 19, 1902, left a void not only in the station's leadership, but in the hearts of the town's mourning citizenry. In just the short span of a half century, the town's name had become synonymous with lifesaving, and recognized as such nationwide, mostly due to James' daring and inspirational guidance; between 1848 and 1898, volunteer lifesavers in Hull earned 275 medals for bravery.

James' death represented the loss of the town's first true hero and most revered citizen. As Life-Saving Service District Superintendent Benjamin C. Sparrow pored over his records in Orleans on Cape Cod to locate an able-bodied and sharp-minded lifesaver to act as James' successor as keeper at Point Allerton, the townsfolk in Hull searched for a new champion to stand behind.

Floretta Vining, the station's next door neighbor and the outspoken editor of a syndicate of nine South Shore newspapers (including the Hull Beacon and Scituate Light) presented her choice for the area's new designated lifesaving hero that summer. Although the Life-Saving Service appointed William C. Sparrow of Provincetown (no relation to the District Superintendent) to replace James the week of July 4th, the same week as the scheduled launch from Quincy of the world's first and only seven-masted steel schooner, the Thomas W. Lawson, Vining chose to pin her hopes elsewhere. On August 15, 1902, under the heading "An Old Life-Saver," she published a portrait of Keeper George H. Brown of the North Scituate station, with a short biographical sketch.

Born in Boston on July 15, 1841, Brown could trace his Scituate ancestry back at least two generations, with both his father and grandfather being born there. The son of a shipbuilder, after finishing school in Boston Brown headed to sea aboard the clipper ship Staghorn at 14, stopping at many sites in the Pacific. At 17, he took up the trade of ship caulker, learning from his father back in Boston until he turned 21.

Joshua James, Keeper of the Point Allerton Life-Saving Station in Hull was the most decorated lifesaver in the U.S. Life-Saving Service. James is credited with saving more than 1,000 lives during his long career in the service. He died on active duty at the age of 74.

On September 1, 1862, hearing President Abraham Lincoln's call for 300,000 Massachusetts men to take up arms against the rebel South, Brown enlisted with the 42nd Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry for nine months' duty, one of 8 George H. Browns that fought for Massachusetts during the Civil War. His experiences during that conflict amounted to nothing more than building redoubts and picketing railroads along the Mississippi River near New Orleans, Louisiana. On August 20, 1863, Brown found himself at Camp Meigs in Readville, MA, to accept his pay and to be mustered out of service.

For two years after his return, Brown ran the schooner Frank, built by his father's firm, Brown & Lovell, as a packet between Boston and Scituate, where he met and married Lydia B. Burrows on August 21, 1865. He later ran the sloop Lady of the Lake as a fishing boat in spring and fall, taking advantage of her as a party boat in the summer, carrying visitors to Scituate's shore out on pleasure excursions. After selling that vessel, he joined John H. Smith of Scituate on board the Bell, a coastal transport schooner.

On December 7, 1879, the USLSS appointed the 38 year old Brown as Surfman Number One at the newly-built Fourth Cliff station. For the next seven years he learned the trade of lifesaver under Keeper Frederick T. Stanley, until December 15, 1886, when he accepted a transfer to the North Scituate station as keeper, upon the completion of its construction. Between May 28, 1887 and August 2, 1902, Keeper Brown and his crews responded to 35 calls of distress, the most memorable of which was the wreck of the brig T. Remick on March 5, 1889. The Maritime Museum's life-saving room today displays one of Brown's most treasured items, built entirely from the T. Remick's wreckage, and described thusly by the Hull Beacon: "H.C. Dimond of Boston presented Capt. Brown a model of the James beach apparatus handcart, such as all life saving crews use, as a token of appreciation of the work of the crew. The model adorns the captains' room at the station and is constructed from copper bolts from the brig and wood from her cabin. On the top of the model's case is a bell presented by Capt. L. H. Forrest."

On December 12, 1902, Floretta Vining again ran Brown's picture on the front page of the Hull Beacon, to celebrate his 23rd anniversary in connection with the USLSS, and to reiterate her support of the keeper as the grand old man of lifesaving. As a Civil War veteran with a lifetime's experience on the sea and nearly a quarter century at work in the noblest of pursuits, George H. Brown already personified heroism to hundreds along the Scituate shore. Could he ever replace Joshua James in the hearts of Hullonians? Only time would tell.

Women in the Coast Guard

Women have played important roles in the Coast Guard, dating back to the 1830s with the first women Light keepers in the Lighthouse Service, which came under the Coast Guard's control in 1939.

During World War II the Coast Guard established a women's reserve branch named SPARS after the Coast Guard motto Semper Paratus – Always Ready. Akin to the Navy's WAVES and the Army WAACs, the SPARS filled in doing administrative duties at home and recruiting other women while Coast Guardsmen and officers were serving in the war or on duty at sea. The SPARS were deactivated in 1947, but reactivated in 1949. In 1973, legislation ended the Women's Reserve and women were integrated into active duty and the Coast Guard Reserve.

In 1976, the Coast Guard Academy in New London, Conn. became the first military service academy to admit women.

Challenges and changes

The role of the Coast Guard since 9-11

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

The U.S. Coast Guard has been multi-tasking for more than 200 years. From protecting early shipping interests and preventing smuggling and piracy as part of the post-Revolutionary War Revenue Cutter Service established in 1790, to its dedication to saving lives born of the U.S Lifesaving Service, the Coast Guard has a vast number of duties and responsibilities.

Those duties have changed and grown since the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks on the country, showing again the versatility and dedication of the nation's smallest military branch.

When terrorists flew commercial airliners into the World Trade Center, the Pentagon and a field in Pennsylvania, the Coast Guard was a key and early responder. Coast Guard small boats were some of the first vessels on the scene in New York helping to evacuate hundreds of thousands of people from Manhattan. As fighter planes were scrambled from Otis ANG base on Cape Cod, the adjacent Coast Guard at Air Station Cape Cod quickly sent out two Jayhawk helicopters in the hope of rescuing people from the burning towers before they collapsed.

In the days after the attacks Coast Guard personnel assisted in the search through the rubble of the twin towers and conducted air quality testing for rescue workers toiling tirelessly at ground zero.

In addition to the response at the scene of the attacks, the Coast Guard immediately bolstered its personnel — activating more than one-third of its reserves in the month after Sept. 11, increasing its active duty strength to 37,671. The War in Iraq drove the Coast Guard's reserve recall to its highest level since World War II with 4,412, or 56 percent of the total reserve mobilized — the highest percentage in any of the branches of the military.

According to the Coast Guard Foundation History on the service, the Coast Guard played a large role in Operation Noble Eagle — the U.S Military operations in homeland security after Sept. 11. With its boat stations strategically located almost equidistant along the nation's coasts, on waterways and at principal ports, the Coast Guard protects 361 ports and 95,000 miles of coastline.

Small boat units, like Scituate's and Point Allerton in Hull, help conduct extensive port security duties, including harbor surveillance, perimeter enforcement for high-risk vessels and vessel boardings at sea. Hundreds of high-speed interception and response craft have been ordered to fulfill this rapidly expanding mission.

At Point Allerton the 25-foot RBS (Response Boat Small) joins the fleet of 47-and 41-foot-vessels Coast Guard crews use to patrol an area from the outer harbor in Boston all the way to Manomet Point in South Plymouth.

These new boats, said Executive Petty Officer James Bodenrader, are a direct result of Sept. 11 and the initiatives taken by the Department of Homeland Security — to which the Coast Guard was transferred in 2003 from the Department of Transportation.

Petty Officer Jason Miele, a Maritime Safety and Security Team member on guard in New York Harbor. The MSSTs are in charge of protecting domestic ports and were established as a direct result of the Sept. 11 attacks on the country.

"The new boats are faster and more maneuverable," Bodenrader said, noting that those capabilities are helpful in search and rescue and particularly in port security patrols.

"Previously, port security efforts were preparation for the 'what ifs.' It's been a distinct change to go from planning to a full grown implementation team doing security."

Lt. Comm. Benjamin Benson, public affairs officer for the Coast Guard in Boston

Port Security has always been a job of the Coast Guard, but it has been stepped up considerably since the terrorist attacks nearly four years ago. "We do a lot more," Bodenrader said of homeland security duties including escorting the LNG (Liquid Nitrogen Gas) tankers in and out of Boston Harbor.

"We used to escort them in, but not out," he said, noting that in addition to the Coast Guard escort, a boarding officer actually travels into port aboard the tankers to further ensure safety.

Guarding the coasts, waterways and ports has always been part of the Coast Guard mission, Bodenrader noted. "As for homeland security, in many ways we always did it, but it was called something else," he said.

Another change in the post 9-11 era that has impacted both Point Allerton and the seasonal station in Scituate Harbor, has been the addition of Plymouth as an area of responsibility, said BM2 (boatswain's mate 2nd Class) Garrick Maynard. Busy Plymouth Harbor, a major tourist attraction, is an area the Coast Guard patrols heavily, as is the area near the Pilgrim Nuclear Power Plant — another possible terrorist target.

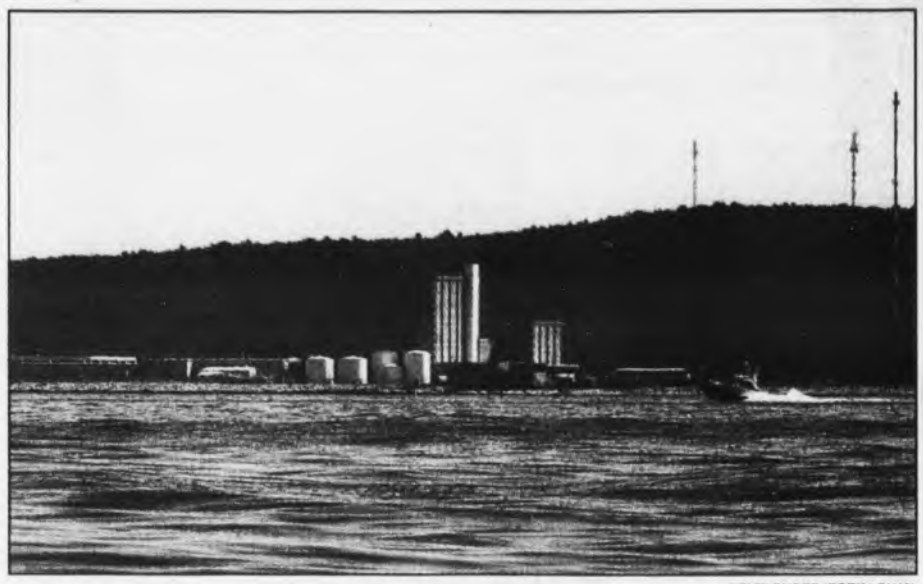
"We have enhanced vigilance," said Maynard. "We keep a close eye on people."

It's a lot of coast to cover, said Bodenrader, noting that getting from Hull to Manomet can take anywhere from 1-1/2 hours to 3 hours depending on the boat and the conditions.

Ferry and commuter boats are also a focus for the Coast Guard. The recent bomb threat to a Nantucket Hy-Line boat compelled the Coast Guard to raise its Maritime Security Level, said Lt. Comm. Benjamin Benson, a public affairs officer for the Coast Guard in Boston. The threat turned out to be a hoax by some area teenagers, but in the wake of the London bombings earlier this month, the Coast Guard wasn't taking any chances. Benson said in addition to Coast Guard protocols, heightened Maritime Security levels lead other agencies and facilities to follow specific security procedures. "Every threat is taken more seriously than it might have been before Sept. 11," Benson said.

The development Maritime Safety Security Teams is another result of Sept. 11, Benson said. While Port Security Units (PSUs) protect ports beyond U.S. borders, the MSSTs work to ensure safety in domestic ports.

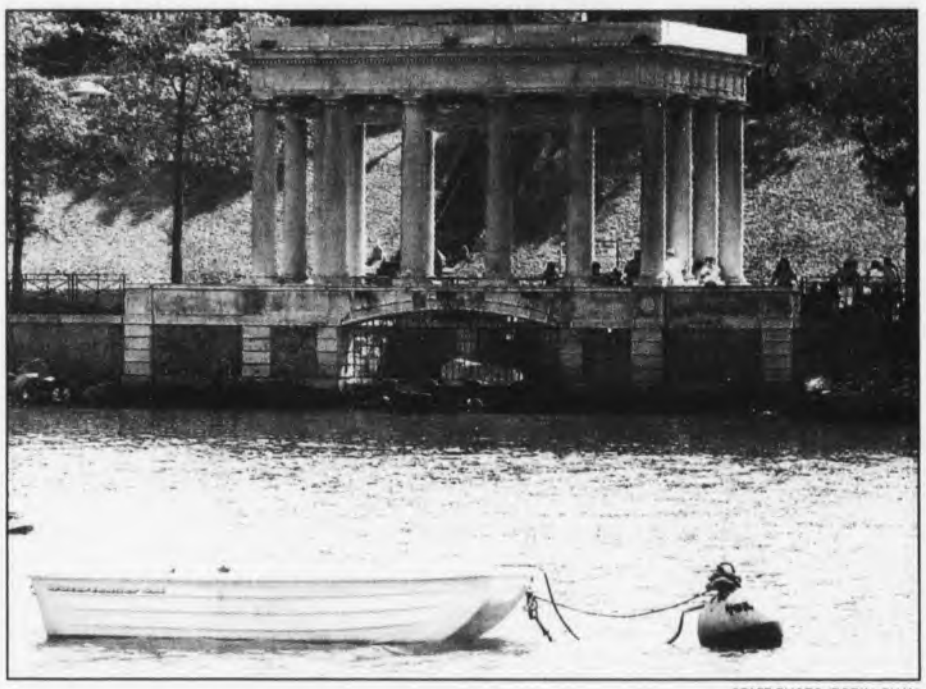
"They didn't exist before," he said.



While the images of M-60 guns mounted on the bow of Coast Guard boats patrolling Boston Harbor may be startling to see, Benson said Coast Guard crews have always been armed and had weapons on their vessels.

Many of the Coast Guard's post 9-11 missions entail duties its personnel have always carried out or trained for, Benson said. The difference is that in the past, it was more along the lines of contingency planning, he said.

"Previously, port security efforts were preparation for the 'what ifs.' It's been a distinct change to go from planning to a full grown implementation team doing security."



Despite the changes, and the perception the Coast Guard is spread thin, Benson said the homeland security mission "doesn't keep us from doing other jobs" whether it be search and rescue, environmental protection or enforcing maritime laws.

"In dealing with terrorism it's essential to be able to respond efficiently," Benson said. "And having the plan in place really helps."

In the last year, the Coast Guard at Point Allerton and Scituate has taken on the responsibility of patrolling Plymouth – particularly the area near the power plant as it is a possible terrorist target. Since being placed under the department of Homeland Security in 2003, the Coast Guard has seen its mission in providing marine and port security grow and expand.

The Coast Guard keeps a close eye on Boston Harbor as part of its port security mission which has become a priority since the September 11, terrorist attacks on the country. The recent bombings in London raised the Coast Guard's Homeland Security Alert level leading to more vigilance and more patrols in ports and harbors.

Serving up Cook plans

Three developers present proposals

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Selectmen have their work cut out for them with three proposals to build senior housing on the Cook Estate are on the table for consideration. All the developers have made a strong case for their designs, and it will be up to the board to sift through the information and potentially make a decision at its Aug. 16 meeting.

Bidders were taken up in alphabetical order Monday night, and first to present was Cohasset Associates, followed by representatives from Deer Hill Partners, LLC and Northland Residential.

Resident Donald Staszko owns Cohasset Associates, which bid $5.15 million on the project. Staszko also owns Cohasset Plaza that abuts the Cook Estate.

Staszko's attorney Charles Humphreys outlined plans for the site, dubbed "The Oaks Farm," which includes 65 units of senior housing.

"We are looking to meet the needs of Cohasset seniors who are looking to downsize and want someone to take over the maintenance," Humphreys said. "This is for people who want to live a simpler life."

Of the 65 units, 41 would be attached, condominium-style townhouses, grouped in duplex and triplex buildings. "There are three different configurations to accommodate people's preferences," Humphreys said. The town homes would have a price range of between $695,000 and $795,000.

Selectmen are expected to take public comment on the three proposals during their meeting Tuesday, Aug. 9.

The Oaks Farm would also have two low-rise apartment buildings, each with 12 units, for a total of 24 rental apartments. Twenty of those apartments would be affordable by state housing standards and four would be market rate, bringing the total affordable housing ratio for the project up to roughly 31 percent. All 24 rental apartments will "count" toward the town's affordable housing stock.

Fourteen of the apartments would be two-bedroom affordable units, six would be one-bedroom affordable units, two would be two-bedroom market rate units and two would be one-bedroom market rate units. Rents for the affordable units would range from roughly $1,000 to $1,300 per month and rents for the market rate apartments would range from $1,500 to $1,800 per month.

"Many people are downsizing and want to be able to live without the investment," of purchasing a new home Humphreys said, adding the rental units will meet that need.

Humphreys said although the Request for Proposals which outlined what the town would like to see built on the project required a

Traffic tie-ups

Subdivision plans off Rte. 3A yield board discussion

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The proposed commercial development of more land off Crocker Lane has raised questions regarding Route 3A traffic. Left turns onto the state highway from Sohier and lower King streets have become nearly impossible.

Traffic will likely get worse with the train and no signal planned for the station at the former Graham Waste site.

The issue surfaced when Rob Schwandt came before the planning board last week to give a preliminary presentation for a subdivision on behalf of the Crocker II Realty Trust. The subdivision would be the last project in a series of development completed by the trust, which includes the 3A medical building, the Cohasset Coliseum building, and the new offices on the former Sweet Sampson candy shop lot.

The proposed development would include building on four lots of land located between Sunrise Assisted Living and the Cohasset Medical Building. Preliminary plans are taking into consideration the future tenant will likely be Rosano Davis, which has been displaced from its Rocky Lane headquarters due to Greenbush line construction.

"They need to relocate and the design anticipates their use," said Schwandt.

However, at this preliminary stage, discussing the design specifics of the buildings was

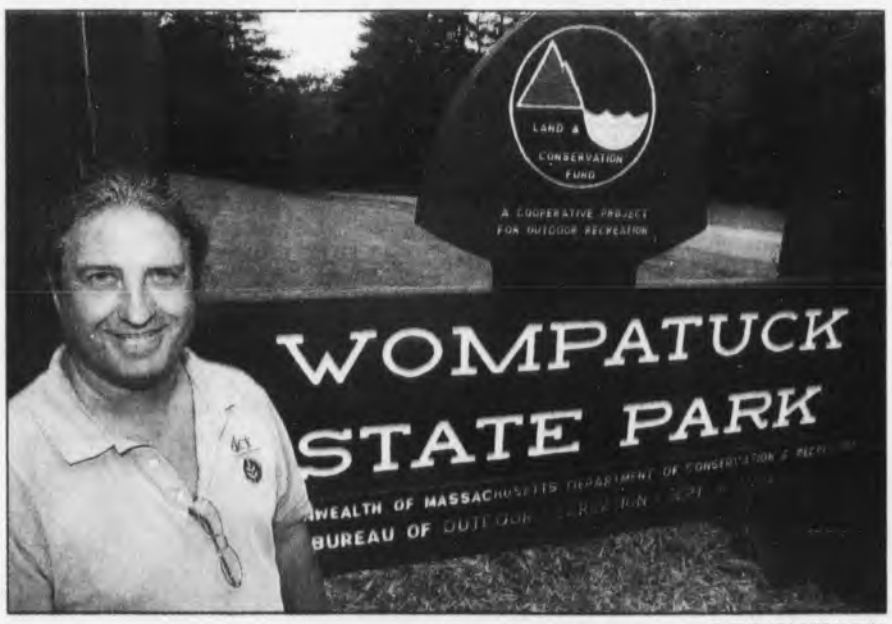
Supervisor looks after parklands

By Jeff Cutler
CORRESPONDENT

Venture into Wompatuck State Park this summer and you're likely to see Forest and Park Supervisor Stephen Gammon working somewhere on the 3,500-acre property which is shared by Cohasset, Hingham, Scituate and Norwell.



Gammon has been with Wompatuck since 1974, and over the last two decades he's come to appreciate open spaces.

Gammon said working for the state can sometimes be a challenge, but he's right where he wants to be. With recent changes in the Massachusetts park system, management has been lumped together under one entity: the Massachusetts Department of Conservation and Recreation.

This can mean park supervisors can finally get their voices heard by the people in charge because there's one central governing body. But it also means that there are more parks and state recreation areas vying for the same money.

Gammon wishes Wompatuck had more funds so he could complete a number of special

Commercial site irks neighborhood

Owner says he'll beautify exterior

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Residents are putting up a fight over the construction of a proposed 9,000 square-foot structure on Smith Place, across the railroad tracks from the post office. Not only do neighbors think the new building will create more traffic in their abutting residential neighborhood, some think the building will just plain look ugly and will not fit in with the character of the area.

Neighbors turned out in full force for last week's planning board meeting to voice their concerns and see if there are any measures that can be taken to mitigate them. This was the second hearing for the proposed building, and at both, some neighbors said no amount of mitigation will negate the impacts of having the structure built on their street.

"It's always tough when a commercial business abuts a residential area," said planning board chairman Al Moore, adding he sympathizes with the concerns of the neighbors. However, "Both have rights, and you can't say to someone you can't develop your zone because you're next to my zone and I don't like it," he said.

Site owner Richard Brown has plans to raze the existing building, located just down the road from Carousel Antiques on Smith Place, and replace it with a new, steel building with eight bays. The new building would be 20-feet high at its tallest point, and would essentially be a large rectangular structure with a garage door and single entrance door on each bay.

Brown said he would like the building to be occupied by local business owners who spend most of their days working on job sites, but are well established and need a home base larger than their home office or garage might be able to accommodate

Commuter boat terminal federal funds are ferry beneficial

Better access and more is planned

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

There's good news for commuters and others who catch the ferry from Hingham Shipyard to go to work or to visit the Boston Harbor Islands or other destinations.

$7.4 million worth of commuter boat improvements are anticipated as the result of a $286 billion federal transportation bill that was recently passed by Congress. The project will benefit thousands of Hingham, Cohasset, and other South Shore commuters and visitors who prefer water transportation.

President George W. Bush is expected to sign the Transportation Equity Act: A Legacy for Users (TEA-LU) into law next week, according to Congressman William Delahunt's office.

The funds will pay for terminal, waterfront, parking, traffic flow, pedestrian, and bus and ferry service improvements, all geared toward enhancing the marine intermodal connection at the Shipyard. There will also be better access to the MBTA's public transportation system and to Logan Airport and streamlined ticketing for the MBTA inter-city and public transit network of ferries and buses and bicycle and pedestrian facilities.

"This will help draw people to explore and enjoy the Hingham waterfront more and make our public resources more accessible to the public," said Corinne Young, district representative for Congressman Delahunt, who led the initiative to obtain the funding. "These funds will also be used to create a new entrance and exit and a bus turnaround for easier commuter boat access."

The Hingham system is one of only 60 in the United States currently classified as intermodal transportation centers, according to Martha Bewick, a long-time commuter boat and ferry advocate. "Hopefully as the Shipyard redevelopment moves forward, there will be an effort to optimize the design for seniors, the disabled, commuters, and visitors to ensure that all those who use the facility have easy access and egress and that the system complements the economic development going on at the Shipyard," she said. "This is a tremendous step in the right direction."

Area residents head home after disembarking the commuter boat Tuesday evening at Hewitt's Cove. The terminal could see big improvements thanks to a federal transportation bond bill.

The funds will pay for terminal, waterfront, parking, traffic flow, pedestrian, and bus and ferry service improvements, all geared toward enhancing the marine intermodal connection at the Shipyard.

The former Hingham Shipyard is being redeveloped as mixed-use development for commercial, retail and residential use. The plan calls for better pedestrian access to the waterfront, open space, improved marina facilities, and open space. Enhanced commuter boat service has been part of the plan from the outset. The redeveloped Shipyard will serve as a gateway to the Boston Harbor Island National Park Area.

Young credited town officials and individuals like Bewick for their leadership in advocating for better design of Hingham's intermodal center and related improvements.

"This is exciting news. Congressman Delahunt believes there's enormous potential to increase ferry service in the Bay State," said Young. "Hingham should be very proud of its efforts toward smart growth and waterfront development. The Congressman is really convinced that to address the pervasive traffic and congestion on the South Shore, we need to go back to the future by embracing and rediscovering our waterfront. That's how we evolved in this region of historic downtowns – utilizing the waterfronts as primary ports for passengers and goods."

Intermodal transportation centers are designed to create a smooth transition among the different modes of transportation – "a terminal designed to accommodate buses coming in and out and dropping people off, easy-access parking, and pedestrian walkways," Young said.

While the details of the improvements are still being worked out, some hope that part of the money will be used to add a deck to the commuter parking area.

Hingham Selectman Phillip Edmundson noted that Hingham has been "advocating for funding for additional infrastructure at the Shipyard for many years with support from the MBTA," which recently installed new dock systems to bring them into compliance with handicapped access requirements as well as other improvements.

"Hingham has been a leader in ferry transportation for years," Young said. "In fact, Congressman Delahunt learned at a recent ferry conference that Bill Spence's company is the oldest provider in the state of ferry service from the South Shore to Boston."

Planners want light shed on 3A traffic not as important as the potential for traffic delays, board members said.

Traffic engineer Richard Bryant of Rizzo Associates said upon first looking at the plans for the site, "They're off to a great start." Engineer John Cavanaro has been working with the Crocker Trust on the design, and had proposed placing the entrance to the new subdivision opposite King Street, making it a four-way intersection.

Although there was some concern from members of the planning board regarding adding more curb cuts to the 3A, Bryant said in terms of safety, having more curb cuts is always better than having less.

Knowing the daily struggles people face when trying to merge onto 3A from lower King Street, coupled with the new traffic the subdivision could generate, planning board member Peter Pratt asked, "Can we get this intersection signalized?"

Bryant said ideally, due to the traffic patterns on 3A, there could be a situation where a light was installed at Sohier Street, King Street, and the MBTA station, and all three could be wired to communicate with each other. Lights could stay green for 3A traffic unless a sensor detected a car at one of the intersections. However, that might not be an option Mass Highway would go along with.

Assistant to the Town Manager for Greenbush Affairs Tom Gruber said the reason there is no light planned for the Cohasset Greenbush station is because Mass Highway denied the request.

"The 'T' agreed to put a light in, subject to Mass Highway approval," he said, adding in the end, Mass Highway said the circumstances on 3A do not justify a light at the station.

However, Pratt said in his opinion, it is ridiculous to not have a light at the station, which is meant to service people who live south of it, and will need to make a left-hand turn to exit the lot. In addition, 3A is undergoing changes which will likely increase traffic, such as the new Dunkin' Donuts drive-thru at the former KoKo Island site, located just north of the Sohier Street intersection, he said.

"Can we get this intersection signalized?"
— Peter Pratt, planning board

If lights were installed, Pratt said it would have an effect on all 3A businesses as it will provide a break in the line of cars. In addition, if Avalon is built, even more traffic will be added to the area, and a light could help mitigate its impact.

Rizzo estimated the Crocker subdivision will generate roughly 600 trips per day, which would be relatively small compared to the other sites in question. Avalon is estimated to generate 1,300 trips per day, the Greenbush station would generate 1,600 trips per day, and the Dunkin' Donuts could see as many as 1,800 trips per day. Roughly 4,600 cars pass through the lower King Street intersection every day.

Engineering consultant to the planning board John Modzelewski said 3A is one of the worst traffic areas in Cohasset.

"Every time I come down here, people talk about this corridor," he said. "King Street looks like a good spot for a light."

Modzelewski said if a group of traffic engineers could come together with their thoughts and people could combine to petition Mass Highway for a light, maybe at least one could be installed.

Proposed commercial building irks neighborhood

He said the ideal tenants would be business owners who are electricians, plumbers, or have similar small business needs. Due to the nature of his clients, Brown said he sees tenants coming to the site once in the morning and again at night, which he said should not greatly impact traffic in the neighborhood.

However, with the train on its way, the Ripley Road entrance to Smith Place will close, meaning the only way to access the property will be by way of Pleasant Street to Cushing Street. With the potential for eight tenants, all of which could have multiple employees working for their companies, abutters worry traffic will increase more than Brown estimates.

Residents say currently, it is very difficult for two cars to pass each other on Smith Place. They say the road is used as a popular cut-through and with additional cars coming through, traffic could become a problem.

However, Brown said in his opinion, when the Ripley Road entrance to Smith Place closes, cut-through traffic will cease. "We will be the only traffic," said Brown.

Brown added he has spoken with fire chief Roger Lincoln who assured him the ladder truck can access his property while another car passes "with ease."

Brown's engineer Brian Taylor from Stenbeck and Taylor, Inc., added while residents might like to see an expansion of the road and traffic mitigated, it is not the applicant's responsibility to fix the town's infrastructure.

Although some residents said they were concerned about the use of the site due to the fact that tenants will not be known until after it is built, Moore pointed out every site needs to be treated as if it could support any number of allowed uses, not just the use the owner is currently proposing. At any time in the future, ownership of the building could change, and so could its use.

Moore said when the plans for the Stop & Shop came before the planning board years ago, the board had to look at the building not as a supermarket, but in terms of every possible use under the town's zoning bylaws.

"It could have been a Building #19 or a bowl-a-rama," he said, as long as it conformed with zoning standards. He added one day, Brown's space could be occupied by a retail store, "Which would generate traffic all day long," and the use would be permitted. Therefore, traffic cannot be a consideration in whether or not the project moves forward.

Design changes

While traffic may not prevent the site from being developed, the board said the design of the new building could pose problems. Under the town's bylaws, site plans must pass the test of being harmonious with the neighborhood, and abutters and members of the board agreed the new building does not fit in with its surroundings.

"I'm not thrilled with the steel building," said Moore.

The planning board's engineering consultant John Modzelewski agreed, as did planning board member Stuart Ivimey.

"I'd be terrified if I was a neighbor and I took a look at that," said Modzelewski, referring to the architect's renderings of the proposed building.

"This is going to be the new eyesore of the downtown area," added Ivimey, adding abutters' property values will suffer. "This is an absolute blight."

Ralph Dormitzer, 111 Atlantic Ave., who spoke as a resident and not as a selectman, said taking a look at the surrounding area, the proposed building is not harmonious with the Art Center, the James Brook Crossing building which has been nicely renovated, or anything else in the Smith Place neighborhood.

"It's uncharacteristic with the rest of the downtown," he said, adding the town is just about to embark on a $1 million renovation to the downtown area, "and we should be thinking of more ways to beautify."

Moore pointed out while the building may not look the way residents would like, if the site remains as it is — overgrown without anyone paying attention to the building that currently stands — it could become more of an eyesore than the new steel building would be.

"Do you want a wooden structure with clapboards and a cupola?" Brown asked.

"That would be a step in the right direction," said planning board member Mike Westcott.

Brown said he would be willing to hire an architect to design a building which occupies the same footprint, but has a more appealing exterior. However, he said changes will have to be economically feasible.

Brown also agreed to meet with abutters to discuss what they would like to see on the site, including potential designs for the new building and landscaping. He said he would be happy to visit with neighbors at their homes and take a look at his property from their perspective.

The public hearing for the Smith Place project has been extended to a date to be determined. Please contact the planning board office for more information at (781) 383-3517.

Continuing budget cuts put Council on Aging at risk

By Samantha Brown

From left, Catherine Kearns, Joan Donnelly and Yvonne Afshar laugh while they deal their first hand of bridge on Wednesday afternoon at the Senior Center, 3 N. Main St. The Council on Elder Affairs, which runs the Senior Center, is concerned that budget cutbacks could have an effect on its programs and services.

If the Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs budget continues being pared down, Director Kathy Bryanton worries the office will no longer have a future.

The CEA's approved budget for fiscal 2005 was $159,222. For fiscal 2006, Town Meeting allocated slightly less — $158,132. However, the CEA had asked for $170,155 to provide services for seniors. With the reduction of roughly $12,000 from the proposed budget, coupled with state and federal funding cuts, Bryanton said the effect has been devastating.

"Our budget has continually been cut back, and I'm concerned about whether we'll be able to function," Bryanton told selectmen last week, adding the senior population in town is increasing and the need for services will continue to rise.

Director of Finance Michael Buckley said while the numbers reflect a loss of a little more than $1,000 from fiscal year 2005 to fiscal 2006, taking into consideration the increase in the cost of living and the necessary salary increases, on the "same level of service terms, they lost $9,000."

Although Bryanton said she has tried to find as much outside funding as possible to help run the office, for the past 20 years she said the CEA has been essentially acting independently budget-wise, trying to find the money to keep things running outside the town budget.

"That is not the way we should have been running," she said, as the CEA is a town department that provides vital services to town residents.

Bryanton said there are some Cohasset residents who are not able to make trips to the grocery store; the CEA sends volunteers to pick up their grocery list and complete the shopping for them. Volunteers bring the food back, help put the groceries away, and ensure the seniors have everything they need for the next week. They even open jars with hard-to-open lids.

The CEA also provides transportation for seniors who are able to shop but have no transportation. It costs money to keep the senior vans running, Bryanton said. Van drivers also make it possible for seniors to attend medical appointments, both in and out of town.

The CEA provides social lunches for seniors as well as exercise programs. The center offers gourmet cooking classes, a book club, knitting classes, and a walking club. Seniors may also attend educational classes in computer training, tax preparation, and receive legal counseling through the CEA. All activities are made possible through the help of volunteers.

But most importantly, the CEA provides life-saving services through its "File of Life" program, which has been started in conjunction with the Cohasset Fire Department. Through the File of Life program, all pertinent information about a senior is collected and put in a folder to be attached to the refrigerator in a magnetic envelope for easy access during an emergency. The File of Life should hold all medical, doctor, and emergency contact information, and a list of medications. In the event there is an emergency, a member of the fire department will take the envelope off the refrigerator and bring it to the hospital.

In addition, for every day the CEA is open, someone will make a check-in call to seniors on the telephone reassurance list. Bryanton said during the week where temperatures were close to 100 degrees, the CEA made many phone calls to seniors who were not on the list, but may have been in need of assistance.

The CEA also participates in a program called "Are you OK?" which is affiliated with the Norfolk County Sheriff's Department. From 6 a.m. to noon, 365 days a year, an automated calling service will ring the homes of those who participate. If there is no answer the first time, the computer will notify the person on duty, and that person will make a call to the home. If there is still no answer, the emergency contact for the elderly person will be called, and if they cannot be reached, a call will be made to the Cohasset police who will make a "friendly visit" to the home to check on the elderly person.

Bryanton is the only full time employee at the CEA, and she is helped by three part-time staff members and 140 volunteers. There is currently grant money to help pay part of the employee salaries, but Buckley said this year, he had to cut $2,000 from the salary line item. Buckley said another long-term problem the town will face regarding the CEA budget is what to do when the grant funds paying the salaries runs out.

Selectman Rob Spofford, who serves as the board's liaison with the CEA, said he recognizes the importance of the services it provides.

"They are the lifeline," to many of Cohasset's eldest residents, he said, adding it is tremendously disappointing to see such a lack of funds being set aside. "There's no question we've under funded it."

Spofford said it is the board's responsibility to come up with a way to keep the programs going for Cohasset's seniors, who depend on the services so much.

Selectman Michael Sullivan acknowledged how critical many of the services the CEA provides are and asked Bryanton whether there are any immediate needs which need to be addressed.

"We need to restore funding for the Vista," she said, referring to the bi-monthly newsletter the CEA sends out to members of the community. The Vista informs seniors of all the happenings at the CEA. The CEA would need $1,500 to keep the Vista going, she said.

Spofford said he thinks the board needs to make a commitment to the CEA to find ways to keep an appropriate amount of funding coming its way. "They need us," he said. "This is what government should be doing."

Michelle Berube wins a new bike!

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

NEXT WEEK

Hello Cohasset. I will be away for next week's column and all information should be sent to mford@cnc.com. Have a great week.

BU HONORS

Gillian R. Weber of Cohasset has been named to the dean's list at Boston University for the spring semester. Great work, Gillian!

DEAN'S LIST

Hats off to Kristen James of Cohasset who made dean's list at Fitchburg State College for the spring 2005 semester. Kristen is the daughter of Terry and Bryan James.

READ TO RIDE

Michelle Berube, age 11, of Cohasset, was a recent bike winner in the 7th Annual Read to Ride summer reading incentive program. Her entry for reading "Who Stole the Wizard of Oz," by Michael "Avi" Yonah, was chosen from over 4,100 entries received to date.

Michelle, who recently won the Hanover kids YMCA triathlon for her age group, is involved in the swim team, dive team, sailing club and tennis in Cohasset. "I was so excited when I heard that Michelle won the bike," said her mother, Patricia. "She really was in need of a new one because she rides back and forth on her own to sailing, tennis and swim team practices. This is a really great reward for all of her hard work."

Her mother, a Dependable Cleaners customer, learned of the program after visiting the store.

"Michelle usually finds time to read three to four hours each week," she noted. "But the program definitely influenced her to keep reading regularly, even after school let out for the summer."

Read to Ride offers children ages 6-15, a chance to win a bike and helmet with a retail value up to $275, for every book completed in seven weeks. The program is sponsored by Dependable Cleaners in conjunction with The Patriot Ledger, Radio Disney, WBZ News Radio 1030 AM, Farina's Bicycle Center in Watertown, Anderson Bicycle in Quincy, Storybook Cove in Hanover, Buttonwood Books in Cohasset and The Braintree Book Rack. For more information about Read to Ride 2005 visit www.DependableCleaners.com.

Michelle Berube, 11, and her new bike that she won through Dependable Clearners' Read to Ride program.

"Alice in Wonderland" is in town for the weekend at the Cohasset Town Hall and you are all invited. The Cohasset Dramatic Club's Summer Theater Camp for children will get ready to take you on a a journey through Wonderland on Friday(today) at 10 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. and also on Saturday, Aug. 6 at 2 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $10 each and can be purchased at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset, The Front Street Book Store in Scituate Harbor, at the door at any of theshows or by calling 617-697-2115.

ROAD RACE

Ken Gritzan of Cohasset will be one of 10,000 runners taking part in the SBLI Falmouth Road Race on Aug. 14 but he will be doing more than taking on the famous 7-mile course. Gritzan is raising money for cancer research and care as a member of the Dana-Farber Running Team. Along with more than 40 other runners, he has committed to raising at least $1,000 for the Jimmy Fund and Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston.

Ken Gritzan is running in the Falmouth Road Race.

Dana-Farber runners define their personal best not by the time it takes to reach the finish line but by how much of a positive difference they can make in the lives of cancer patients everywhere. Dana-Farber runners can run to raise funds in any road race, marathon or triathlon, but several races feature teams of Dana-Farber runners, including the Boston Marathon, the B.A.A. Half Marathon and the SBLI Falmouth Road Race. The SBLI Falmouth Road Race has long been recognized as one of the best races in the nation. The field annually includes many of the top American and international runners.

Most runners receive entry into the race based on a lottery system. A limited number of guaranteed entries are available to runners who are raising funds for one of several charities. Last year the charity program was responsible for raising more than $460,000. To contribute to Gritzan's run, send checks payable to "Dana-Farber Cancer Institute" to DFMC, 10 Brookline Place West, Brookline, MA 02445-7226, or go to www.jimmyfund.org/falmouth.

That is all for this week. Please send all of your news to me no later than Tuesdays by noon.

Aquarion calls for voluntary outdoor water conservation

Aquarion Water Company of Massachusetts, which serves North Cohasset, is calling for its customers to voluntarily reduce outdoor watering activities, effective immediately. The move is due to high water demands the company has experienced along with the recent weather patterns consisting of extended hot and dry periods.

If the voluntary measures do not reduce demand, Aquarion will then implement the second phase of its water management program, which requires mandatory outside water use restrictions. During this phase outside usage is limited to watering by hand and permitted by the address of a customer's property in relation to the calendar date from 6 PM to 9PM. For example, Any street could use water outside during the specified time period on any even numbered calendar day. No usage is allowed on the 31st day. The third phase of the program does not permit any outside water usage. The penalty for using water during a prohibited use period is $50 for termination and $50 to $165 to restore water service.

Aquarion recommends several ways to use water wisely outdoors and to help in the water conservation effort.

• Water your lawn and garden only when they need it.

• Don't follow a set watering schedule.

• Water grass and plants by hand only when they shows signs of wilting. An easy way to tell if your lawn requires water is to step on the grass and then step back. If the grass stays flat, then it needs to be watered. If the grass springs up, it still has plenty of moisture

• Deep soak your lawn and garden when you do water. Water by hand long enough for the moisture to soak down to the roots where it will do the most good. In this way, the lawn will develop a deeper root system which requires less watering and is more disease resistant.

• Water during the cooler parts of the day to avoid evaporation. Heat and wind will rob your lawn and garden of water before it can be used. Watering before 9 a.m., or after 6 p.m. helps to prevent evaporation. Automatic sprinkler systems should be set for manual operation. This prevents needless watering when it is raining or when there has been adequate rainfall. Be sure to direct all sprinklers so that water contact is with vegetation and not wasted on sidewalks, streets, or driveway.

• Hand held watering is strongly encouraged. Hand watering allows one to direct water to the specific area that needs water. Don't leave your garden hose unattended. More than 600 gallons of water can be wasted in only a few hours.

• Repair all leaks indoors and outside. A dripping faucet that leaks one drop per second wastes about 2,700 gallons per year.

Man indicted in Logan case

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The ongoing investigation into a three-year-old home invasion has yielded its first indictment.

Kevin Gunter, 22, of Boston was indicted July 28 by a Norfolk County Grand Jury on charges of receiving stolen property allegedly taken during the break-in of Polly Logan's Nichols Road home on July 1, 2002.

David Traub, spokesman for the Norfolk County District Attorney's office, said Gunter will be arraigned on the charge of receiving stolen property valued at more than $250 on Aug. 11 in Norfolk Superior Court.

Traub said shortly after the break-in Gunter allegedly received multiple expensive rings valued at roughly $1 million in exchange for a small amount of crack cocaine.

He subsequently fenced the rings to a crack dealer for $700.

When Gunter was indicted he was being held at the Massachusetts Correctional Institution in Shirley on firearms violations that occurred in Suffolk County.

The perpetrator or perpetrators, who stole the jewelry, silver items and Logan's black 1994 Ford Escort wagon during the home invasion, tied Logan's hands and feet with duct tape and left her in an upstairs bedroom in her Cape Cod-style home during an oppressive heat wave. Dangerously dehydrated, Logan was found roughly 36 hours later by a handyman, who was an on- and off-tenant at her home. He called 9-1-1.

Logan's car was located a few days later in Dorchester.

Traub said the Cohasset police in cooperation with the district attorney's office have done a tremendous amount of work investigating this case. "They deserve a lot of credit for bringing this to the point of an indictment," he said. "Hopefully this will not be the last indictment."

Police Chief James Hussey said Cohasset police are continuing to work with the DA's office on the case. "We look for more indictments down the road," he said.

Noel Ripley looks out from inside the Town Clock in the First Parish Church steeple.

Historical figure

Noel Ripley loved history and old clocks – which are almost one and the same when you think about it.

For those who are new to Cohasset, Noel served as "Keeper of the Town Clock" for which he received the princely sum of $100 a year that he donated to charity.

At the time of his death last week, Noel was also the chairman of the Cohasset Historical Commission and served as the town's Veteran's Agent.

Here at the Mariner, we often crossed paths with Noel at Town Hall where he would stop by to take care of business involving one of the many hats he wore for so many years.

Noel has appeared in dozens of our stories as a source for historical information and was featured several times repairing the Town Clock in the First Parish Church steeple or talking about his South Main Street home, built in 1695 – making it the oldest in Cohasset.

While Noel enjoyed working on timepieces of all sizes, his eyes would sparkle when he described his work on the Town Clock. Roughly 28 years ago with the help of fellow resident Fran Collins, Noel took the broken clock apart and rebuilt it at South Shore Vo-Tech in Hanover.

In a 2002 interview, Noel had just fixed the Town Clock – which boasts a 60-pound pendulum and 60-pound weights — after seeing it had stopped.

"It just looks bad when you have a clock stopped in a prominent location – it makes the town look lazy," he said.

The Noel we knew didn't mince words. He was intelligent, direct and opinionated, especially about historic preservation, one of his passions. Noel was a purist, wanting our antique homes and buildings to remain true to their heritage.

Although Noel was an excellent source for our stories – he didn't seek out publicity. But with his special expertise and involvement in the town's history, the press found him.

Noel, who was the town's Veteran's Agent for 18 years, won a battle to unseat him back in 1999. His work was quiet and very much behind the scenes – which irked some veterans who felt he'd lost touch with them.

But Frank Hamilton, an Army veteran who knew Noel for 30 years, put that to rest. He described Noel as modest, humble and unselfish – someone who went beyond paperwork to help veterans reestablish their lives. At the time, Hamilton said in a letter to selectmen, "I don't know many people who would take this part-time position and provide full-time concern."

More recently, Noel and the historical commission tried to get a "Demolition Delay Bylaw" – similar to Hingham's that protects historic structures – adopted at Town Meeting. Although their effort was unsuccessful, the sentiment behind the bylaw was one of deep caring about preserving what makes Cohasset truly unique.

Noel was worried about the town losing its character. "I think the reason people come to Cohasset is because they want to see a place that looks like this," he said at the time.

Hamilton Tewksbury, who served on the historical commission with Noel for many years, praised his intelligence and attention to detail.

"He's been serving the town in many areas for years," Ham Tewksbury said. "But yet many may not know him. But now that he's gone – we're all going to really miss him."

Noel knew better than anyone that time marches on. But some people can't be replaced and we think Noel was one of those individuals whose passion for things historical, especially clocks, was a gift. It was a gift he readily shared.

"It's amazing to think that this machine can still work after almost 200 years," Noel said about the Town Clock. "Most cars stop working after 10."

At 77, Noel lived a long life – but not one long enough in our view.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Bad haircuts and ugly hedges

TO THE EDITOR:

Most men would not venture outdoors with a bad haircut. Why then, do so many display hedges that have grown ugly because of improper pruning?

Too many hedges are pruned so the top is wider than the bottom, thus the lower leaves are shaded from sunlight and die off. Result: bare stems surmounted by an unprepossessing clump of green.

Hedges should be pruned so the bottom is wider than the top, or at least with vertical sides, so that sunlight reaches and sustains the lower leaves. That's contrary to how most hedge plants want to grow (which is to be like a tree with all foliage at the top). The owner's job is to thwart that tendency (not encourage it), by pruning it to grow into an attractive hedge, with foliage from the ground up, and sides tapering to a slightly narrower top.

Other than a very few bad haircuts and far too many ugly hedges, Cohassset is looking good these days

House Bill supports children with autism

State Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, announced the House of Representatives passed House 4177 – an act to maximize federal reimbursement for special education services for children with Autism. The legislation is now on its way to the Senate for engrossment.

Bill 4177 directs the Commonwealth to apply for a Medicaid waiver to maximize federal reimbursement for critical services, including intensive in-home intervention services, determined essential to support children diagnosed with Autism Spectrum Disorder in their homes and communities. Children with autism frequently fail to receive essential services. Of those who do receive intensive in-home services through the school district or the state, 100 percent of the costs are covered by the Commonwealth and or municipalities. With the Medicaid waiver, the Commonwealth can receive federal reimbursement for 50 percent of the cost of services that support children with autism in their home and communities.

"Securing a Medicaid waiver for children with autism will allow us to leverage at least $16 million of state dollars to receive $8 million in federal matching money."
— State Rep. Garrett Bradley

"Securing a Medicaid waiver for children with autism will allow us to leverage at least $16 million of state dollars to receive $8 million in federal matching money," Bradley said.

Autism is the most widely diagnosed developmental disability in the nation, affecting 1 in 166 children, a tenfold increase over the past 20 years. Every day, 66 children are diagnosed with autism, nearly three per hour.

Rep. Garrett Bradley to hold office hours

State Representative Garrett J. Bradley, D – Hingham, will hold district office hours on Monday, Aug. 15 at the Sons of Italy Hall in Hingham, from 6 to 7 p.m. Visitors should enter his district office through the Route 3A side entrance of the building. If unable to attend scheduled office hours, call Rep. Bradley, 617-722-2396 for an appointment.

Rocky Lane Bridge work begins

COMMENTARY

TOM GUBER & MARK BRENNAN

An artist's rendering of the Rocky Lane Bridge.

Adjacent to four houses South East of Rocky Lane, the MBTA has started construction for the new Rocky Lane Bridge. Once the trees were removed from the 50-foot strip of land from North Main Street to the railroad, the path of the new bridge became very evident. The accompanying picture is an artist's rendition of what the bridge might look like when completed. We do admit that this picture probably makes the bridge look a bit prettier that it will in real life, but it does give you an accurate idea of its location.

The site chosen for the bridge was a good location since the land on the other of the tracks from North Main Street is high ground.

Currently, the MBTA has begun work on the foundations for the bridge. This is only the first step in what will be about one-year construction project before the bridge is complete. We have mentioned previously that this section of the railroad will have two tracks, one being the main line, the other a parallel track used so that trains can pass on what is otherwise a single-track system. So, the bridge will be a bit longer than if it spanned only a single track.

The site chosen for the bridge was a good location since the land on the other of the tracks from North Main Street is high ground. Thus, major construction is only needed on the North Main Street side to raise the road enough to clear the trains. If you look at the site from North Main Street this can easily be seen and you will be able to watch the progress as the bridge takes shape.

On another matter, over the past several months a number of abutters have called us with questions and concern over items that may not have been completed as a part of the initial clearing operation. Each of these items is receiving our detailed attention. Tom Carroll, the contractor's Outreach Director, has been great in working with us on these items. Tom has proven to be an invaluable communication channel for us to get things done. However, we do need to be a bit patient. For some of these items, the contractor may need to bring back some of their specialized equipment that is in use elsewhere. This can only be done after the current use is finished.

As the MBTA continues its clearing work between Beechwood Street and the North Scituate Town line, please keep in mind that everyone should stay away from the clearing and all other construction work. The machinery and equipment used is and noisy so that operators have limited visibility. Children, with their inherent curiosity, are particularly at risk if they inadvertently wander too close. The entire right of way should be avoided, even after the workers go home at the end of the day. Safety is very important for all of us.

Video games 'rating creep'

HEN$HAW

TOM HENSHAW

Have you ever clicked to an "R" rated movie on Cinemax and been disappointed to find that the adult language was just an occasional "damn," the violence was only a slap on the wrist and the women managed to keep their Mother Hubbards on throughout the flick?

Or are you one of those people who turn on a "PG" rated cinema epic and are aghast to hear the F-word slung around like baseballs, see violent acts that include the basics of a Texas Chainsaw Massacre and women to whom clothes are something to strew on the bedroom floor.

The folks who devised the rating systems for the movies, the TV shows and the video games (that's right, video games) are confused, too, when TV-MA shows up as TV-Y. They call it "ratings creep." It's getting so you can't tell the G players from the X players even with a scorecard.

The problem came to a head the other day when someone discovered that a video game called "Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas" contained not only instructions for stealing cars but an explicit sexual scene as well.

Rating systems have been confusing people ever since Will Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association, trotted out the first code of cinematic conduct in 1930...

"Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas" was stripped (if you'll pardon the expression) of its "M" rating. That means, I suppose, that stealing cars is a profession worthy of a video game but only if you do it while fully clothed.

Perhaps I should explain the rating system for video games for those who don't have children old enough to find the "Play" button on a remote or young enough to check out "Lady Chatterley's Lover" at the library.

EC (Early Childhood) is for ages 3 and older. E is for ages 6 and older, E10+ is for ages 10 and older, T (Teens) is for 13 and older, M (Mature) is for ages 17 and older, and AO (Adults Only) is for ages 18 and older.

The TV ratings system is even more complicated than that. How many of you know that there is a rating of TV-Y7-FV? Don't feel bad. I never heard of it until the other day, either. It is "fantasy violence for children over the age of 7."

Rating systems have been confusing people ever since Will Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association, trotted out the first code of cinematic conduct in 1930 as a reaction to Hollywood scandals of the '20s.

"No picture shall be produced which will lower the moral standards of those who see it." There would be no scenes aimed at making illicit sex attractive, no scenes of "gratuitous passion," no lustful kisses and embraces, and no suggestive gestures or postures.

To which the humorist Gene Fowler replied: "Will Hays is my shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in clean postures."

Joe Breen, the code enforcer, determined that shots of people milking cows might endanger moral standards somewhere as would men and women, even married couples, sleeping in the same bed. He even ordered a Bible removed from a scene that included the notorious Mae West.

The powers that be under the code even suggested unsuccessfully that Clark Gable's most memorable line from "Gone With the Wind" be changed from "Frankly, my dear, I just don't give a damn," to "Frankly, my dear, I just don't care."

That would get either a "G" or an "R" in today's rating system.

HEALTH NOTES

Avalon site passes environmental muster

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

A week ago last Thursday, a public meeting was held in the basement of Town Hall to present draft reports covering a "comprehensive site evaluation and remedial action alternatives" for the Webb Norfolk property. Notification was sent to the Water Commission, the Board of Health, the Surface Water Protection Committee, members of the Planning Board, the Advisory Board, the Trustees of Reservations, and the Town Manager. The Board of Health forwarded the invitation to representatives of other boards which might have an interest.

The general context of the presentation was that the property is aging nicely and time is taking care of any past grievous environmental transgression. Although contaminants exist in hotspots on the sites, their levels are relatively low and are annually being reduced by natural processes. It is expected that any further remediation on the site will consist of monitoring potential concentrations of contaminants discovered during investigation.

Further, the site is not located within a drinking water source area, a potentially productive aquifer a Zone II wellhead protection area or the Zone A of a surface water body used as a public water supply. It is, however located within the boundaries of Cohasset's Water Protection district.

What does all this mean in terms of what can be built on this property? The property is zoned for light industry, but is under agreement (meaning committed) for use by a low-income housing developer. From a health standpoint, the contamination on the site presents a very low threat for those on the site regardless of its intended use. Modern oversight of light industry is sufficiently thorough that there is little opportunity for contamination of the higher levels previously considered acceptable, and a residential use for the site is covered by equal if not more stringent regulations.

Although contaminants exist in hotspots on the sites, their levels are relatively low and are annually being reduced by natural processes.

If dwellings were to be built on the site, construction regulations involving impermeable barriers and other safeguards would ensure that site preparation would preclude the introduction of contaminants to any buildings. Small, nearly undetectable contaminants may enter the groundwater, but the travel times for these chemicals would be such that they would be dissipated before they left the property.

In addition to characterizing the threat from pollution, last Thursday's meeting also proposed the level of oversight necessary to ensure the long-term safety of the site regardless of the use to which the land is applied. The consultant concluded that a 30-year monitoring program would be sufficient to ensure that any contaminants remaining on the site would be fully dissipated to harmless levels. This conclusion was based on tests taken on the site beginning in 1991. Thus any use of the site would be accompanied by a continuing measurement program of any locations having remaining pollutants likely to be harmful in the future. If the amount of contamination in such sites continues to lessen in future years, the site can be considered safe.

So, we have a piece of property of 62 acres bordered on the north by Cohasset Heights Landfill, the Mass Highway Dept. and the Town water tank. To the east the site is bounded by King Street (Rte 3A) and several small businesses including Sunrise Assisted Living, Cohasset Collision, a fitness center, medical building, etc. And to the south and west by Whitney Woods.

So, as of now, no permits have been issued and therefore no plans have been officially placed before any Town Boards. Consequently, the Board of Health is not aware of any current plans for wastewater disposal, although the drawings in Thursday's package indicate a location for wastewater treatment, and the report indicated that "there is proposed development of the site as residential apartment buildings." We're all waiting to see what happens next.

Serving up plans for Cook estate

50-foot setback, the Cohasset Associates proposal increased that buffer to 90 feet. He said the wall of foliage which currently exists at the top of the hill on Sohier Street would remain in tact.

"You'll have the same visual appearance at the top of that hill," Humphreys said, adding the design saves as many specimen trees as possible. In addition, he said the design doesn't fight the landscape and homes will be built into the hills, which will allow the homes to blend into their surroundings, and "will provide excellent views for all," he said.

"The whole concept is don't fight the property, let it work with the land," Humphreys said.

The Cook Estate house would remain on site and serve as the community center for residents. Humphreys said the design team feels it is a historical treasure which should be saved. There would be an indoor pool in the community center, a gazebo outside on the common area, and water features. "That all costs money, but it's so worthwhile," he said.

In addition, Humphreys said it is important to note there will be an open space common in the middle of the development. "Which is parallel to the larger community we live in."

Humphreys said Staszko and his family want to both own and maintain the property. Staszko would be the manager of the homeowner's association. He said Staszko has a good reputation in town, as he has owned Cohasset Plaza for the past 20 years.

"Look at its condition and the landscaping. Look at the way he's maintained it," Humphreys said, adding Staszko's family looks forward to maintaining the Cook Estate property for a long time.

Humphreys acknowledged the fact that Staszko owns a parcel of undeveloped land next to the Cook property and said in light of that, "We will never have to come back to you," with wastewater problems on site. He said there is a substantial amount of percable soil on Staszko's property, which could aid with any wastewater disposal issues. Its close proximity could also provide direct access for seniors to the shops in Cohasset Plaza.

While in his original bid submission Staszko submitted a supplemental proposal which would allow the project to use his land to build an additional 20 units, therefore increasing the profit the town could make on the land, that option was not discussed during the meeting. Staszko has put in an alternate bid of $5.95 million, if the town decides to explore that option.

Selectman Michael Sullivan asked whether the fact that Staszko does own adjacent property gives him an unfair advantage over the other bidders. He said the board wants to be sure there has been a fair bid process, and using his adjacent land may not be fair for the other bidders.

"You have a backup and we have to understand the legal implications," said Sullivan, adding he would like to run the issue by Town Counsel.

Humphreys said in his opinion, he doesn't think Cohasset Associates should be denied the advantage because they are abutters. "We hope you'd see that as an asset," he said.

Sullivan then broached a sensitive subject and said he had spoken with three of Staszko's previous tenants at the plaza who have all said he was the reason they left his building. Sullivan said, however, seeing that the tenants were longtime tenants, it does beg the question of how bad could it have really been for them to have stayed so long. Sullivan said he just wanted to bring up the point to get everything out on the table.

Humphreys pointed out there is a difference between being a commercial landlord and a residential landlord. "They have to be tough to keep it looking like they do," he said.

Staszko said all the rental property will be controlled by the state. "They oversee everything," he said. Staszko said he will maintain the property and "keep very high standards."

Selectman Rob Spofford asked Staszko about his experience building residential housing. He said he knows Staszko as being more of a commercial developer.

"Why should we go with a developer who doesn't have as much experience?" he asked.

Staszko said he has built more than 200 residential units in the last 25 years, including multi-family units in Boston, western Massachusetts, and on the South Shore. He said in addition, members of his development team all have extensive knowledge in building residential housing, and together they will build a terrific project for the town.

Deer Hill Partners

Plans submitted by Deer Hill Partners stood out from the others as it was the lone bid without a rental component. All 56 proposed units would be available for purchase.

Deer Hill Partners is comprised of three companies — Horizon Partners, LLC of Braintree, Conroy Development Corp. of Stoughton, and Cohasset resident George McGoldrick's company Black Rock Development, Inc. of Hingham. Deer Hill Partners bid $4.9 million for the project.

McGoldrick submitted a bid proposal during the first round and came in second to Northland Residential. He said in the roughly 17 months which have passed since then, he has continued to gather information and he believes his development team is the group to get the project done in a quick timeframe, while meeting the needs of the town.

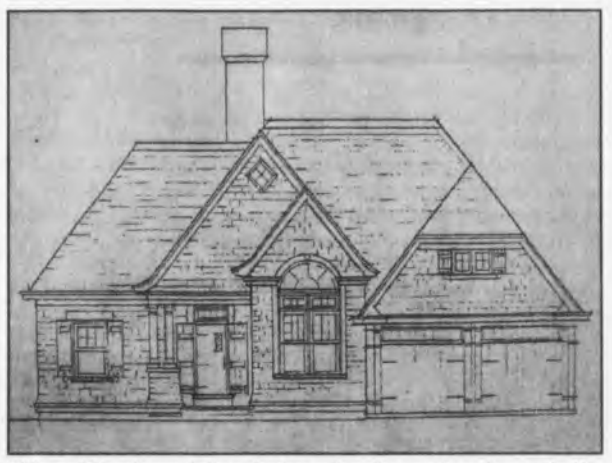
McGoldrick's proposal features 25 detached, single family market rate carriage homes, located around the perimeter of the property, as well as 31 one- and two-bedroom units located in a central "manor home." Of the manor home units, 17 would be market rate and 14 would be affordable and "count" toward the town's affordable housing stock.

At 56 units, McGoldrick said his development is the least dense proposal. In addition, he said with the smaller amount of units, there will be less wastewater to deal with.

The affordable units in the manor home would be sold for roughly $150,000 on average, and market rate units would range from roughly $420,000 for a manor house unit to $700,000 for a single cottage-style home.

McGoldrick said his free-standing detached homes, "Are the type of units seniors are looking for," based on feedback he has received from building The Residences at Black Rock in Hingham.

"We had significant resistance from buyers with our duplexes," said McGoldrick, adding "People like to feel like they own their own four walls."



At Black Rock, there was so much negative feedback on the duplexes, after one was built, he had to go back to the town to see if it would be possible to change the plans. The town obliged and from then on, only single units were built, based on the preference of the seniors interested in buying, he said.

With the Cedarmere development ready to break ground any day, McGoldrick said there will soon be affordable rentals and high-end condominiums available in town. However, he said there will be nothing for seniors in the moderate income range.

Plans to build 65 units of senior housing to be known as "The Oaks Farm" have been submitted by Cohasset Associates. This rendering depicts one of three townhouse configurations submitted in the company's proposal. The site would house 41 town houses, grouped in both duplexes and triplexes, and would have two low-rise apartment buildings with 12 units each, for a total of 24 rental apartments.

This architect's rendering depicts what the carriage homes built by Deer Hill Partners could look like once constructed. Deer Hill Partners has plans to build 25 detached, single family market rate carriage homes around the perimeter of the Cook Estate property, as well as 31 one- and two-bedroom units located in a central "manor home."

Northland Residential has scaled back plans for "The Villages at Deer Hill," and now hopes to build 65 units of senior housing on the Cook Estate. Housing options would include 45 town-home style condominiums and 20 mixed income rental apartments, which would be housed in one building to be located where the Cook home currently stands. This architect's rendering depicts what a possible Northland town home could look like.

"It is very important to meet that need," he said, adding he believes that is what the town's Senior Multi-family Residence Overlay District bylaw, which any Cook proposal would file under, was originally drafted to achieve.

"There will be a $900,000 average price at Cedarmere," for condominiums, he said, adding at the other end of the spectrum, seniors will have to qualify for Cedarmere's affordable units, and many will not after selling the family home. He said his moderately priced units will fulfill the need to downsize, yet remain in town.

In developments with both rental and ownership components, McGoldrick said there are a number of problems which can arise. Those who belong to the condo association may want to make improvements and will take a vote to make changes happen, but renters tend to want to keep their monthly payments as low as possible because they do not own their property, which can create a distinction between the two groups.

"We won't have that problem with our moderate units," said McGoldrick, as they will all be purchased. He added the cost to own one of his units is roughly the same as the average monthly cost for renting, but instead they will have equity and the tax advantages of home ownership.

All of the affordable units will be housed in the manor home, which will be located where the Cook Estate house is currently located. He said the choice to place the building in that location is simply because that is the point on the property which has the best views.

"We'll have the best views for the most units," he said.

McGoldrick said he understands the time constraints the town is under and said because his manor home is the same size and has the exact same number of units as the proposed manor house for Cedarmere, which has already been approved by the planning board, that should be one less obstacle his project must overcome.

In addition to housing units, the manor home will serve as a community center. However, McGoldrick said there will not be a pool. In his experience, he said a pool is only used maybe 10 percent of the time, and without it, it will help keep condo fees low, as there will be no maintenance costs. He said for seniors, walking trails are much more desirable, and there will be paths on site. The Cohasset Swim Center is located at the bottom of the hill on Sohier Street, and will be available for seniors to use in the summer.

With development of Black Rock finished, McGoldrick said he would be able to "devote 110 percent to this."

"We're turning people away," at Black Rock he said, adding, "We can send them here."

Selectman Rob Spofford said the senior housing committee has consistently said seniors need more rental units.

"Are they wrong?" he asked, as Deer Hill Partners did not propose any rentals.

McGoldrick said one of the biggest concerns seniors have is affordability, and by purchasing a home in the $375,000 to $400,000 range, the monthly payments are brought down to an amount equal to what they would pay to rent.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said being completely honest, he did not like the size and prominence of the manor house. However, McGoldrick said it is only one-third larger than the home which currently stands.

"You will see it from the street, but not like the Deer Hill School," he said, but added at the end of the day, that location will provide a good amount of residents with a fantastic view.

Selectmen Gary Vanderweil and Sullivan agreed with McGoldrick.

"I think it is a bold and creative move," said Vanderweil.

"This way, the most people get to take advantage of the best views," said Sullivan.

Northland Residential

Northland Residential's proposal was no surprise as the company has been before the board before with a similar plan for "The Villages at Deer Hill." Northland was the company chosen during the first round of bidding and had been working with the town to build senior housing on the site for more than one year.

While most Cohasset residents have seen vice president of acquisitions Jack Dawley as the face for Northland, president and CEO of the company Frank Stewart presented the latest Northland proposal.

"We're as excited about (the project) in its reduced form as we were at the outset," he said.

Stewart said he was sure the board was familiar with the proposal because of its recent dealings with the company, and therefore gave a brief "technical summary" of the proposed plans for the site.

Northland would like to build 65 units of senior housing on the site, which would include 45 town-home style condominiums and 20 mixed income rental apartments. With the reduction, Northland was able to make the shift to mostly duplex structures, although some will remain as triplexes. Stewart said because of all the work the company has done on the soils, he is confident the wastewater from all 65 units will be able to be accommodated on site.

The town homes would have two pricing levels and 33 would be more "upscale." There would be four different town home styles, most of which will have two bedrooms. Town homes could be purchased for a price of between $625,000 and $725,000.

The site where the Cook Estate house currently stands will be transformed into a larger building, which will serve as a community center, but will also house 20 apartments, of which four would be one-bedroom market rate units. All 16 affordable units would count toward the town's affordable housing stock.

Market rate rents would run between $1,400 and $1,600 per month. Sixteen apartments would be one-bedroom affordable units with rents of between roughly $800 and $1,200 per month.

Northland bid $5 million on the project and Stewart said the bid was compiled based on 35 years of experience. "This is not a side business for us. We've completed over 150 projects."

Currently, Stewart said the company has several other major projects in the works, and "This would fit perfectly into our corporate structure."

Selectman Rob Spofford said in a previous presentation, he had heard the market is leaning toward single units, not duplexes. "Do you agree?" he asked.

Stewart said if his company had not had success with duplexes, they would not have included them in the plans.

"We are firm believers that this approach does work," he said, but added "If you have a way to do singles, that is the ideal. The majority of people would rather singles." Stewart said it is just a question of whether singles can be done on the site or not.

Stewart added duplexes, if built right, can have the feel of a single-family dwelling.

Spofford also asked whether in his experience, developments with rental and ownership property have any issues, which was also brought up in a previous presentation. Stewart said in his opinion, the market is still strong for mixed-income developments.

"We think it's nice to have a project with mixed use," he said. "From our experience, we don't see any problems."

Northland's affordable units put the project at 24.6 percent affordable, when there must be 25 percent affordability under the town's bylaws. The RFP specified proposals must have 25 percent of its units affordable.

"Why not build 17 (affordable apartments) and reach 25 percent affordability?" asked selectman Gary Vanderweil.

Stewart said in the end, there could be 17 affordable apartments, but added he has seen developers in the past who aren't good at projecting costs, and less affordable units are built in actuality. He said as the project unfolds, they could consider adding the additional affordable unit.

The board of selectmen will meet Aug. 9 at 6:30 p.m. and discussion on the Cook Estate is slated to begin roughly at 7:30 p.m. The board will be taking public comment that night. The board will also meet Aug. 16 at 7 p.m. and the meeting will be held solely for the purpose of discussing the Cook Estate. Both meetings will be held in the selectmen's meeting room in Town Hall, and will also be televised. Copies of the proposals are available for viewing in the selectmen's office. For more information, please contact the selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105.

Background on the Cook Estate

After two hours of discussion, voters at the November 2003 Annual Town Meeting approved the purchase of the Cook land, located on Sohier Street, for $4.5 million, to be marketed to developers with the town's adjacent land, with the intention of selling the parcels together for a profit. However, problems arose with wastewater disposal and plans changed.

Northland Residential was awarded the original bid on the project in March 2004, and soil tests conducted soon after determined wastewater from 95-units of housing - the maximum number of units the original Request For Proposals asked for - could not be handled on site and other options would need to be looked into. The RFP dictated what the town would like to see built on the site.

Northland spent a good deal of money and put in countless man hours helping the town come up with wastewater solutions. Soil testing was done on site, holes were dug at both the South Shore Music Circus and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library to determine whether off-site leaching fields would be a possibility at either location, and the possibility of municipal sewer was also pursued. However, in the end the only alternative found was to downsize the project, as fewer units would generate a smaller amount of wastewater, which could be accommodated on site. However, with the change in scope of the project, the board of selectmen said it would be necessary to begin a new bid process pursuant to Massachusetts procurement laws.

Advertising for the new RFP began June 15, and final bids were due July 15. Developers presented their plans before the board Monday, Aug. 1. The board will meet Aug. 9 at 6:30 p.m. and Cook discussion is slated to begin at 7:30 p.m. The board will hear public comment that night. The board will also meet Tuesday, Aug. 16 at 7 p.m., solely to discuss the Cook project.

Old Ship Meetinghouse is open for tours

Every summer descendants of the early settlers visit Hingham and the Old Ship Meetinghouse, the oldest structure in the country in continuous use as a church. Visitors can often find an ancestor in the list of early settlers and can often see the very pew in which that family sat.

The frame, those great oak timbers that were raised by the townspeople over the span of three days in July, 324 years ago, still stands. Over the years, however, rotting sills and floors have been replaced and a basement added, windows changed, and light and heat added, but still, when one walks in, one feels the presence of centuries.

Through August the Meetinghouse will be open for tours from 1-4 every Sunday through Friday.

Keith Lockhart, Boston Pops conquer Cohasset

Broadway singer Liz Callaway joins Keith Lockhart and the Boston Pops at the South Shore Music Circus on Saturday night.

Boston Pops conductor Keith Lockhart was the guest of honor at a gala reception at the South Shore Art Center following Saturday night's sold-out benefit concert at the South Shore Music Circus.

For the second year in a row, America's orchestra brought the packed audience to its feet, as Lockhart presented an array of familiar favorites, led the group in a patriotic sing-along, and ended the evening with the 1812 Overture.

Roughly 200 guests joined Lockhart in the galleries of the Art Center as arts supporters delighted in the chance to spend time with the Maestro while feasting on a fabulous array of summertime fare.

President of the Board of Directors Bill Earon welcomed the crowd:

"The arts enhance all of our lives, and we are grateful to all who support the outstanding education and exhibition programs that the Art Center provides for our communities," Earon said.. "From individual contributions to corporate sponsorships each gift matters and helps ensure the Art Center's success for the next 50 years. Thank you all for your commitment to the arts, and thank you Keith Lockhart for sharing our vision."

The benefit concert and reception raised more than $40,000 for the South Shore Art Center's art education and exhibition programs.

Keith Lockhart director of the Boston Pops leads the audience in a sing-a-long of patriotic songs, such as "America," "It's a Grand Old Flag," and "Yankee Doodle Dandy."

Chris Oddleifson, president of the Rockland Trust which is a platinum sponsor of the South Shore Art Center; Frank Neer, director of the SSAC; Sarah Hannan, executive director of the SSAC; and Bill Earon, president of the board of directors of the SSAC join Keith Lockhart for a photo.

A crowd waits for Keith Lockhart's arrival to the Bancroft Gallery at the South Shore Art Center.

Casey Anderson made a name for herself at CHS

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

Casey Anderson

For a while, you couldn't read about just Casey Anderson.

It was always, "Casey Anderson, sister of Cohasset High School graduate Tommy Anderson."

Tommy was a three-sport star (football, hockey and lacrosse) for the Skippers, and has continued his craft on the lacrosse field at Connecticut College.

By now, Casey has more than made a name for herself. Among her athletic accomplishments over her CHS career: leading the soccer team in goals as a junior and senior; leading the basketball team to the state tournament the last two years, topping the Skippers scoring charts both seasons; helping re-start the softball program as a sophomore, and twice earning South Shore League All-Star honors as a catcher.

Casey fondly recalls her first two years at CHS while Tommy was still there.

"I did feel like I was in his shadow," Casey says, "but I was never jealous about it or anything like that. I always looked up to my brother and his accomplishments."

Still, Casey gets a hard time every now and then about it. When younger sister Meg had a breakout game during this past basketball season, some suggested Casey should simply be referred to as "Meg's older sister."

Joking aside, as Meg excelled for the CHS tennis team as a freshman this spring, Casey was always there to watch (when she didn't have a softball game, of course). In fact, the Class of 2005 grad was a regular at Cohasset sporting events, whether it be the football games (which Casey says are among the high school experiences she will miss the most) or as one of the Lacrosse Mamas, a group of seniors who made the trip to Medfield for the boys lacrosse team's state championship game.

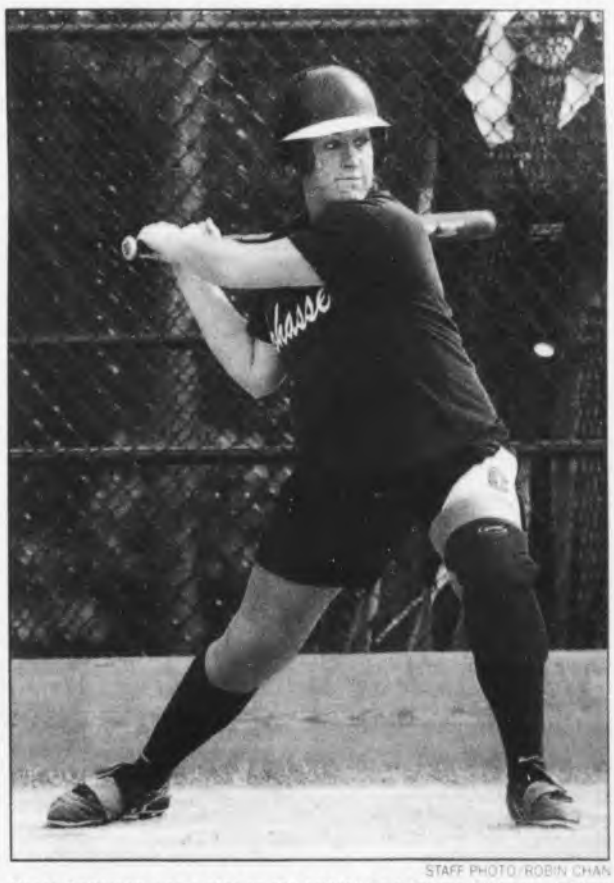
"We had nothing else to do; we were out of school," Casey says. "We all just packed into two cars, and it was so fun."

If you talk to any of Casey's coaches, the words "She's a great kid" are almost always among the first phrases you'll hear. Consider what soccer coach Deb Beal had to say about Casey's character.

"Casey is one of those people who will just bend over backwards for anybody. She's a total team player," Beal said. "I love Casey; she's one of my favorites."

What is also mentioned about Casey across the board is her leadership abilities, particularly with some of her younger teammates.

"What stands out to me with Casey is her leadership skills; she was always great with the younger kids," said CHS softball coach Deb Bostwick. "As a sophomore, she had to groom a new pitcher. Her junior year, she was working with two new pitchers. She was great with that, and she was always someone you can rely on to stay upbeat."



Skippers basketball coach John Levangie concurs.

"We had a pretty young team this year," he said. "There were times when the younger kids would be in awe of what was going on, and Casey was always there to help them relax and make them feel better."

Next year, Casey will be one of those younger kids, as she will be a freshman at Roger Williams University in Bristol, R.I. where she will continue to play basketball. She has been spending part of her summer playing in a summer league in Bridgewater with many of her new teammates.

Beal and others believe Casey could have played any of the three sports at the collegiate

This NHL diehard says absolutely not

Don't be absurd.

Of course the NHL will bounce back.

Remember all of those naysayers who turned out in droves to forecast dark days following the work stoppages in the NFL, NBA and Major League Baseball? How silly do those folks look right now?

But here they come again, amazingly; every Tom, Dick and Gordie is telling us the NHL can't recover.

Absurd.

So how will the NHL bounce back?

First off, we all know the diehards have gone nowhere. The stoppage could have lasted five years, and these folks would have kept scanning the net, searching desperately for rays of hope. And know this: there are at least as many "hockey-first fans" in this country as there are "basketball-first fans," probably more...and that doesn't even call into play the fervor north of the border.

The demographic the NHL has to set its sites on recapturing is the "casual fan." Nothing new there, though. This objective is only slightly more pressing now than it was pre-lockout.

Truth be told, the NHL's "casual interest" level was probably at an all-time low when Tampa Bay knocked off Calgary in June of 2004.

Drastic steps needed to be taken to fix this league. Number one on that agenda was coming up with a salary plan that reflected economic reality. Well, the owners held strong for the first time in U.S. professional team sport history, and got that accomplished.

Relatively speaking, all other obstacles that stand in the way of true NHL success appear a whole lot less daunting.

Next on the agenda is making the NHL game faster, more exciting and higher scoring. Several quality steps toward that end have already been taken.

For example:

- Ties are now a thing of the Upcoming is the US 210 National Championship, which will be hosted by the Cohasset Yacht Club from August 10-14. Twenty-eight boats are expected to participate.

level, but Casey is sticking with her favorite. Her love for hoops started in the first grade, when she played on a team coached by her father.

"I was taller than most of the boys," Casey says. "I would just chuck it up there whenever I got the ball. I usually schooled them."

One of Casey's top high school memories was Spirit Night for Cohasset basketball last winter, where the Skippers pulled out a last second win over Hull to clinch a spot in the state tournament.

"The gym was packed," Casey recalls. "Everyone was cheering in the bleachers; I think it's so fun when everyone gets into it like that.

"That's why I like basketball so much, just the intensity and fast-paced nature of the game."

When she hasn't been on the court this summer, Casey has spent her weekday mornings as a coach for the Cohasset swim team. Kids in four different age groups, ranging from 6 years old to 17, compete in the South Shore summer swim league, which Casey herself participated in up through last year.

"The little ones are so cute," she says of the younger swimmers.

Casey's liking for young children has led her to study education at RWU, with the hopes of, at least at the start of her career, teaching in an elementary school. And when she gets to that point, she hopes to be teaching in or near Cohasset.

"I definitely want to stay here," Casey says. "I think this would be a great place to raise a family."

In the meantime, Casey will make it back to town when she can during the school year. It may be tough during basketball season, but she will find a way.

"Especially since Meg plays," Casey says. "I'll have a good excuse to come back."

past. Many hockey purists are up in arms over the ruling to decide regular season games by shootout, but this one (at least from a marketing standpoint) was a no-brainer. Ask virtually any casual fan what the most exciting occurrence in hockey is and they'll tell you a penalty shot. Well, now, any game that plays out to a deadlock in regulation will be determined via penalty shots from six of the most exciting players in that game.

- And goalies will be forced to try to stop these shots with smaller pads than we've seen in recent years. The width of the leg pads will shrink from 12 to 11 inches, and the catcher, shoulder pads, pants and jersey will also be smaller. Also shrinking is the area in which goalies can legally play the puck. Now, netminders are restricted to a trapezoid-shaped area that begins behind the goal line.

- The blue line has been pushed back four feet, which should provide a big advantage in the offensive end, particularly on the power play.

- The center red line has also been taken out of play, meaning two-line passes are now allowed.

- The icing rules have also been re-written to present clear offensive advantages. Long "home run" type passes that miss their targets will no longer draw a whistle. The team guilty of the dump out icings will be further penalized, though, forced to keep their tired players on the ice for the ensuing face-off.

- There is also the annual promise to more closely enforce the obstruction penalties. This time, though, based on the obvious change in circumstances, it seems a whole lot easier to believe it. Less clutching and grabbing would obviously lead to more of the exciting, wide open play the casual fan loves.

Then there is the excitement that will take place before the players ever hit the ice. It's happening already. There were more than 200 free agents when the signing period commenced Monday morning, including a shockingly long list of perennial all-stars, many of those players unceremoniously dumped by their 2004 franchises as a result of the new hard salary cap.

Few things attract the casual fan more than speculating on how their team's roster might take shape. This is the NFL draft times 10, in terms of likely immediate impact. You simply can't underestimate the potential an unparalleled feeding frenzy such as this has for creating a buzz.

Close to home, fervent and casual fans alike have much to buzz over. The frugal practices the Bruins were assailed for in recent years now puts them in position to cut a palpable swathe through the free agent crop.

Unitarian Universalists adopt bold policy on criminal justice and prison reform

On Saturday, June 25, the annual General Assembly of the Unitarian Universalist Association adopted a sweeping new policy statement on criminal justice and prison reform. The statement issues a broad critique of the criminal justice system and calls for numerous reforms, including elimination of the death penalty, ending mandatory minimum sentencing and focusing on prevention rather than punishment.

This was one of the many high points of the annual General Assembly of the Unitarian Universalist Association, which met for five days at the end of June in Fort Worth, Texas. Nearly 4,000 attendees from across the nation gathered to worship, elect officers, vote on resolutions and witness on behalf of their liberal faith. The national delegation re-elected the Rev. William G. Sinkford to a second four-year term as president of the UUA and endorsed current moderator Gini Courter for a first full term.

Participating from First Parish Unitarian Universalist in Cohasset were Eric Kluz, lay leader, and the Rev. Dr. Jan Carlsson-Bull, minister. Kluz, a practicing architect who lives in Scituate, is current president of the Ballou Channing District, which includes close to 50 congregations in Southeastern Massachusetts, the Cape and the Islands, and Rhode Island. At General Assembly, he was elected president of the District Presidents Association, placing him at the helm of regional leaders guiding the work of the 20 districts within the Unitarian Universalist Association.

Carlsson-Bull was re-elected to the Commission on Social Witness, a five-member body of the Unitarian Universalist Association. This commission oversees the social witness process that is driven by congregations and districts throughout the UUA. As part of this process, the General Assembly delegates passed the Statement of Conscience advocating sweeping reforms of the U.S. criminal justice system, and the assembly voted to endorse six Actions of Immediate Witness, official statements on social justice issues that are current and specific in focus. The Actions included calls to end crimes against humanity in Darfur and to cease all U.S.-sponsored torture. Four other Actions offered official support for the following efforts: the United Farm Worker's boycott of Gallo Wines, the Millennium Development Goal of ending extreme poverty, a fair trial for Dr. Sami Al-Arian and defending the freedom of the airwaves.

Full texts of the Statement of Conscience and the AIWs can be found at www.uua.org/csw.

Carlsson-Bull was re-elected to the Commission on Social Witness, a five-member body of the Unitarian Universalist Association.

On the afternoon of June 25, several hundred Unitarian Universalists and other people of faith gathered outside the Forth Worth Convention Center to protest the continuing use of the death penalty in Texas and across the United States. Unitarian Universalist Association President, the Rev. William Sinkford, spoke for the UUA. "When we affirm the inherent worth and dignity of every human being, we try to mean it. The death penalty does not work to prevent murder."

Sinkford pointed out that our use of the death penalty puts us in the company of three other countries at the top of the list for executions: In 1999, the People's Republic of China led the world in executions, the Democratic Republic of Congo came in second, we were third and fourth place went to Iraq, then ruled by Saddam Hussein."

"We do not steal from the thief, rape the rapist or torture the torturer. We ought not kill the killer," Sinkford exhorted the rally's participants. He then led the group in prayer for the families of victims, those who sit on death row, the families of death row inmates, the elected officials of the State of Texas and ourselves. He prayed, "Mistakes in this human system lead to death. May we find a path that does not place us in the role of ultimate judges."

According to Cohasset's Rev. Dr. Carlsson-Bull, "The stances taken on these timely social issues both reflect and inform how we put our faith into practice on the home front and beyond. From a criminal justice policy that is driven by a politics of fear and the barbarism of the death penalty to genocide in Darfur, we are called by our faith to speak out against oppressions which need not be and to work together to reverse the tide. We seek to be people of inclusive faith and abundant hope."

Sunday morning's service attracted 2,787 worshippers, and the offering raised $42,000 for three Fort Worth relief agencies. The worship service and other major programs were broadcast over the World Wide Web and attracted an international audience with viewers from as far away as Adelaide, Australia. Many videotaped programs may be found on-line at www.uua.org/ga/ga05.

Unitarian Universalism is a liberal faith that is free of creeds while holding shared values, that include the intrinsic worth of each of us and the interconnected web of all life. Its roots are in the Judeo-Christian tradition. Three of the first six United States presidents were Unitarians, and for more than two centuries Unitarians and Universalists have served in prominent roles in the government, judiciary and ministry. The two traditions consolidated in 1961 to form the Unitarian Universalist Association.

Gammon wants everyone to love Wompatuck State Park projects at the park. Due to fiscal constraints Gammon only has three year-round laborers.

"I love working for Wompatuck," he said. But Gammon said with more resources, he'd do a few more projects to make the park even more of a draw.

"My wish list for Wompatuck would include year-round interpretive programs in our visitor center, more staffing, more people using the campgrounds, a strong 'Friends' group, trails and buildings in good repair and the purchase of lands that surround the park," he said.

In addition to Wompatuck Gammon is also charged with maintaining Ames Nowell State Park in Abington, Cushing Memorial in Scituate, and Triphammer Woods. In total, there are 4,219 acres of land under Gammon's purview and he's pleased to be so closely tied to an area with such a rich history.

According to Gammon, the land here has morphed from private to government to public land in the span of less than a century.

"Wompatuck was originally owned by private parties," said Gammon. "The U.S. government took the land to construct the Hingham Naval Annex, where ammunition was stored and mines were made for WWII. It was also in service during the Korean and Vietnam wars.

"In 1967 part of the annex was purchased by the Commonwealth for a state park. On Jan. 1, 2004, the Commonwealth took title to the last piece of the old annex," he explained.

The historic aspect of the park really appeals to Gammon.

"It's funny how public property gets cut up," he said. "MassHighway owns a strip of what we think is part of Wompatuck. So it's important for supervisors to be aware of and to protect their boundaries.'

While he's not aware of any state parklands that have been sold, he's dead-set against converting public land to private. One way to do so is to maintain a dialogue with legislators and let them know the value of the public park system, Gammon said.

Donations can also be made to the Wompatuck or Ames Nowell Conservation Trust by mail or by simply depositing your contribution in the "iron ranger" at the park headquarters.

Even with some financial challenges, Wompatuck has been improving its facilities and the park regularly. In fact, Gammon said the park currently has multiple projects underway. These include: the installation of a new Visitor Center roof; the demolition of some old military buildings deep in Wompatuck; the clean-up of the rail trail on the Cohasset side of the park; a new power supply for the park; road clearing in the park for cycling activities; and ongoing trail maintenance by New England Mountain Bike Association and other interested parties.

While Gammon and his staff is trying to improve the park, others don't entirely appreciate their efforts. He said that the park staff recently demolished an old military building that had been vandalized extensively. The crew stopped for the day, realizing they only had a little more to complete the next day.

But, when they returned in the morning, they discovered someone had spray-painted and broke windows of the excavators being used for the project. So, a project that was going well suddenly incurred the added expense of an overnight security officer.

For the most part, explained Gammon, people want to help out.

"Many people have lived within a few miles of Wompatuck and never knew that it was here."

— Steve Gammon, park supervisor

"If anyone wants to get involved with the park system, join the Boy Scouts, New England Mountain Bike Association or the Friends of Wompatuck," he said.

Events are posted at the park headquarters for anyone who wants to volunteer to help out.

Efforts to maintain and improve the park are yielding positive results. Today, Wompatuck is best known for its mountain biking and hiking trails, cross country skiing in the winter, and an abundant number of diverse species of wildlife.

At the park headquarters, there's a book where visitors can jot down the type of animal they saw in the woods so Gammon and other rangers can get an accurate tally on the animals within the park.

Be it talking about the deer that prance near the borders of the park or working in the woods to better the trails, Gammon enjoys sharing the park with everyone. He does this best by pointing out the important aspects of the park that no visitor should miss.

"If someone had never been to Wompatuck," said Gammon, "I would send them to Mt. Blue Spring for a drink and then for a walk down Beechwood Street to the Aaron Reservoir (in Cohasset)."

Wompatuck is also one of the few local parks that offers camping with electrical hookups, a dumping station and hot showers. These facilities are open from April 15 to Nov. 1 and see a fair amount of use all summer from people who are visiting the area from all across the United States and Canada.

However, some longtime residents haven't visited Wompatuck, which is right in their backyard.

"People are usually delighted with Wompatuck when they first discover it," said Gammon. "Many people have lived within a few miles of Wompatuck and never knew that it was here."

The many miles of paved trails make the park a perfect place to ride a bike or stroll adjacent to scenic woods. And the visitor center offers seasonal interpretive programs — several of which are being offered this summer by former Disney employee and graduate student, Steven Bellerose.

Gammon said Wompatuck is unique because of the events it hosts each year and the number of visitors it sees. It's also a local gem because of its proximity to major cities including Quincy and Boston.

Wants everyone to love Wompatuck

"Wompatuck (and the other parks) are special because they are islands of green in suburban sprawl," said Gammon. "They are places where nature can thrive and people can go to relax. Wompatuck is one of the best mountain bike parks around and our campground is close to Boston and Plymouth, and makes a convenient stop for travelers to stay while visiting Boston, the Boston Harbor Islands, Fort Revere, Plymouth and Plymouth Plantation."

For Gammon, the future holds 10 more years of park service (totaling 41 for his career) and then some volunteering on trail days and during special projects.

He said there are so many projects left to do at the park and he wants to see them completed.

"I would also like to see groups of local camping families regard the campgrounds as their own," said Gammon. "And I want to see a strong friends group passing the test of time."

Gammon grew up in Scituate and still lives there with his wife Karen and two sons, Brenton and Sam. He also sings and plays the guitar for a local rock band, Blame the Dog.

Dynamic duo take the Music Circus stage

Michael Feinstein and Linda Eder perform together Aug. 5

Singers Michael Feinstein and Linda Eder are each headliners in their own right, but Friday night the pair will share the spotlight — and the stage — at the South Shore Music Circus for their new show, "Two for the Road."

"I've been standing on stage alone for a long time," explained Eder by telephone from her home outside Manhattan last week. "I don't really get too many chances to duet, so it will be great to be singing with Michael. I have a great deal of respect for him."

Michael Feinstein

Linda Eder

Feinstein, a four-time Grammy nominee also known for his efforts to preserve and protect music by composers from Irving Berlin and Cole Porter to George and Ira Gershwin and their lesser-known contemporaries, was quick to return the compliment in a separate telephone interview recently. "I love Linda very much as a person and, of course, as a singer. We've done the occasional song together over the years, but this will be our first fully integrated show. We'll be doing a series of duets that are new to us. We'll open with 'Some Enchanted Evening' and also do songs like 'How Do You Keep the Music Playing? It's been very illuminating to see how well certain songs work as duets. The songs have been chosen for different reasons so they really run the gamut. A lot of these songs, however, just work emotionally very well as duets."

The joint concerts come at a time when both artists are preparing to promote new albums. On September 27, the Concord label will release "Hopeless Romantics," a collaboration between Feinstein, 49, and legendary jazz pianist George Shearing on the music of Academy Award-winning composer Harry Warren ("I Only Have Eyes for You," "The Lullaby of Broadway"). Just days later, on October 4, Eder's latest CD, "By Myself: The Music of Judy Garland," on the Angel label, will hit record stores.

While Feinstein says fans will have to wait for future concerts to hear music from his new album, Eder, 44, plans to preview her upcoming release in Cohasset. "I'll be doing at least one of the songs in my solo set and Michael and I will also be doing a Frank Sinatra and Judy Garland medley together. Garland was my first big musical influence. She had one of the finest, most amazing voices of any singer I have ever heard. It started out high and very pretty, and as she got older it just deepened and got richer. I have always felt a connection to her. She's been a benevolent ghost in my life for a long time now. When I perform at Carnegie Hall, or somewhere else where she has also been, Judy is always on my shoulder."

The Minnesota-reared Eder made her Broadway debut in "Jekyll & Hyde" in 1997. Just last year, Eder divorced that show's composer, Frank Wildhorn, after a six-year-marriage and one child, Jake Wildhorn, and got a taste of the personal adversity that often seemed to be Garland's steady diet.

"I've been through a lot in the last few years, which has added new layers to my life. No one escapes the lows and Judy's were extreme, but you felt you knew her," says Eder, who points out that she has not set out to mimic Garland, but rather to evoke the strength and fragility of her voice. "I hope to find that people still so desperately miss Judy that they can at least find some pleasure with this album."

As if adjusting to life as a single parent while preparing for both a summer concert tour and a new record weren't enough, Eder is also tackling a new assignment born of another of her personal pleasures — horses. Expanding on her love for the animals, Eder is executive producer and host of "Trail Mix" which will premiere on Animal Planet in January.

Eder welcomes the hectic schedule, but says she could easily do without one of her career's core requirements. "It's the most daunting thing in the world to me to have to learn so many new lyrics. And now I have two entire new concerts to learn. So when I forget the words to a song, don't write harshly about me," she says with a laugh.

Michael Feinstein and Linda Eder will appear in concert at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier Street, Cohasset Friday, Aug. 5, at 8 p.m.. For tickets and information, call 617-931-2787 or visit www.themusiccircus.org

A new album from a folk favorite

Creative Judy Collins plays Cohasset Aug. 7

Judy Collins

Judy Collins knew just where to turn when she wanted advice on her latest album, "Portrait of an American Girl," released in April on Collins's own label, Wildflower Records.

"It takes a long time to finish an album, so when this was just about done I sent it to Jac Holzman. I liked the sequencing very much, but I also wanted his opinion. When he said he liked it very much, I knew we had gotten it right," explained Collins by telephone last week from her New York office.

It was Holzman — founder and former chief executive officer and creative head of Elektra Records — who first discovered Collins, and signed her to the label, in 1961 after seeing her perform at The Village Gate in Greenwich Village. That fateful meeting led Collins, who comes to the South Shore Music Circus on Sunday, to a 35-year association with Elektra which produced 19 albums and helped make the singer/songwriter one of the lasting legends of folk music.

For her first studio album in eight years, Collins recorded covers of the Motown hit "Sally Go 'Round the Roses," Train's "Drops of Jupiter" and Bruce Cockburn's "Pacing the Cage," as well of her own new songs.

"It's always work to write a song. It's always been my pattern, however, to keep working on writing all the time. I have notebooks full of songs that will never see the light of day."

While continuing to focus on music, Collins has also made time to pen several best-selling books, including her three memoirs, "Trust Your Heart," "Singing Lessons," and "Sanity & Grace: A Journey of Suicide, Survival and Strength," which dealt with the suicide of her only child; a romance novel, "Shameless"; and her latest, "Morning, Noon and Night: Living the Creative Life," released in June.

"In talking with my publisher (Tarcher/Penguin Putnam), we decided it was time to do something in the self-help realm. By writing about my own creative process, I hope at least some people to save some of the time I have wasted over the years," Collins says with a laugh. "I want to help people to focus on their creativity and increase the productivity and enjoyment in their projects, whether they be in music, theater, writing, craft work, decorating, cooking, or anything else that challenges the artist in all of us."

Judy Collins will appear in concert at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Solier Street, Cohasset Sunday, Aug. 7, at 7:30 p.m. For tickets and information, call 617-931-2787 or visit www.themusiccircus.org

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

A MATTER OF FREQUENCY

Frequency (expressed in Hz) refers to the number of vibrations of sound that occur in one second. The range necessary for understanding human speech is about 125 Hz to 6000Hz. Although we may characterize one person's voice as being deeper than another's, the frequency range of human speech does not vary much from speaker to speaker. In fact, the high-frequency sounds of speech are quite similar for everyone. Therefore, anyone who has a high-frequency hearing loss will have difficulty with all speakers. And because women and children tend to produce less high-frequency energy when they speak, their speech will create the most hearing difficulty for individuals with age-related hearing loss (presbycusis).

When you feel that things don't sound "right" or the way they used to, but you don't know why, come to FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER for a complete, painless hearing evaluation from a Board Certified Hearing Instrument Specialist. We are extensively trained in evaluating people with hearing loss and fitting them with the most appropriate hearing instrument for their individual needs. We're conveniently located at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Building in Weymouth, with a second office in Abington. PH: 781-337-1144. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits, and Mass Health.

P.S. Presbycusis is characterized first by an inability to hear high-pitched sounds, followed by a loss of hearing in the middle frequencies, and finally the lowest.

DESTINATIONS

Europe is for lovers

In these enchanting towns, all roads lead to romance

By JUDI JANOFSKY AND RICH STECK
SPECIAL TO THE HERALD

With exquisite old buildings, scenic bridges and intoxicating aromas of grapes ripening on vines, cheeses aging in caves and crusty bread baking in brick ovens, Europe casts a romantic spell on the senses. Under that spell, couples fall in love all over again.

It has that effect every time we visit, which makes the task of choosing favorite spots so difficult. Our preferences range from towns so tiny they hardly merit a mark on the map to large cities that have been attracting romantics for years.

Vezelay, France

Head south along a narrow road from Paris to Burgundy, and an apparition appears: a medieval town carved out of a hill topped by a magnificent church.

Bruges canal at night

The road zigzags as it climbs higher, taking us closer to the Basilica Sainte-Madeleine, a Romanesque pilgrimage church once believed to contain the remains of Mary Magdalene.

Time here seems to have stood still since the 12th century. Tiny cobblestone streets radiate in all directions from the town square. Lovers walk along the crumbling grey ramparts overlooking rolling green valleys. Less than a mile below, hugging the narrow sidewalks, are delightful cafes and shops.

Near the heart of this bewitching setting is Poste et Lion d'Or, an old country inn with elegant faded French charm. It's furnished with medieval antiques, and its shuttered windows look out over ivied rooftops below. Beds in the guest rooms are covered with soft linen sheets and duvets as fluffy as clouds. Bathtubs are large enough for two. And the view of the vine-laden valley is as romantic as it gets.

Bruges beyond the bridge

Poste et Lion d'Or, Place du Champ-de-Foire, rates about $66 to $174 per night; www.laposte-liondor.com

Ravello, Italy

Seemingly suspended between sky and sea, Ravello's cliffside location on the Amalfi Coast is seductively alluring. Most of its streets are narrow labyrinthine paths that ramble by the town's main plaza and up to its two famous villas.

The 11th century Villa Rufolo, with its profusion of flowers and water vistas, is the setting for classical music performances and concerts. (Here Wagner -- so enchanted by the gardens -- wrote the second act of his opera "Parsifal," in which his hero had to resist temptations of satanic young girls.)

Up a steep wildflower-covered trail is the Villa Cimbrone. Its combination of sweetly fragrant gardens and beautifully ornate statuary nearly overwhelms the senses. All of its paths lead to the Belvedere, a terrace that literally hangs over the cliff and offers dreamlike seascapes along the coast. A perfect spot for a tender kiss.

Nearby, perched above the sea and hillside terraces lush with lemon trees and graceful palms is the Palazzo Sasso, an Arabian Nights-style palace hotel that has been attracting lovers for generations. (Roberto Rossellini romanced Ingrid Bergman in its restaurant.)

What kept us spellbound were the unparalleled views of the Mediterranean. Especially from the lounge, where we sat for hours in a secluded nook watching the warmth of the landscape at dusk turn to the passion of moonbeams at night.

Palazzo Sasso, Via San Giovanni de Toro 28, about $342 to $685; www.palazzosasso.com

Bruges, Belgium

Bruges is Venice without the crowds. Streets, lined with ivy-laced medieval buildings, meander above and around canals over which sweeping tree branches droop with the weight of age.

Couples stroll across bridges arched over canals where graceful swans swim. In doorways elderly lace makers weave the intricate patterns that made Bruges the lace center of Europe. It's as though you've stepped back into the Middle Ages when Bruges was Europe's center of wealth and ladies walked arm-in-arm with gentlemen of distinction.

At dusk, we dined in the Hotel Duc de Bourgogne's candlelit restaurant. In a private alcove overlooking the canal, we ate steamed mussels, drank white wine and breathed in the faint perfume of wildflower bouquets scattered across the room.

Hotel Duc de Bourgogne, Huidenvettersplein 12, about $132 to $180; www.ducdebourgogne.be

Prague, Czech Republic

With its riverfront location and spellbinding beauty, Prague is everything romantic. Small in size, it's easy to wander the ancient cobblestone streets winding around old palaces and majestic theaters that span the centuries.

Divided by the Vltava River, the two sides of Prague are connected by a series of bridges, none more spectacular than the Charles Bridge. Built in the 14th century of sandstone blocks now darkened with age, this bridge later was adorned by larger-than-life religious sculptures of saints and madonnas. Today, it's a pedestrian boulevard offering strolling couples daytime views of patina-toned towers and nighttime illuminations of the famous Prague Castle.

The heart of the city is Old Town and its central square. From Gothic to Renaissance to art nouveau, the square's beautifully painted and marvelously sculptured buildings reflect the wealth and prosperity of Prague over the centuries.

But it's music that plays to the heart here. Day and night, concerts are offered -- from the Czech Philharmonic to organ recitals and chamber music ensembles.

So it seems appropriate to stay at the music-themed Aria, a contemporary hotel with Old World elegance. Throughout the public areas, ancient music notes are inlaid in the floor. Room keys are shaped like musical notes. And each oversized guest room, with sumptuous beds and soft linens, honors a musician with CDs, art and books. Plus, the hotel's rooftop restaurant serves up romantic sunset views of the city night after starry-eyed night.

Aria Hotel, Trziste 9, from about $419; www.ariahotel.net

The Black Forest, Germany

The Black Forest, full of magic and mystery, is a wonderland for romance. Its rolling hills wind through a beautiful patchwork of dense green forests and crystal blue lakes. Giant meadows are carpeted with wildflowers in spring and blanketed with white snow in winter. Dotting the countryside are castles as dreamy as the fairy tales they inspired.

Perched atop a hill overlooking the picturesque town of Baiersbronn is the Hotel Bareiss, one of Germany's most beautiful resorts. With its light French country style, handpainted walls and exquisite wood furniture, suites here are a perfect sanctuary for lovers of any age. Our suite had a circular living room wrapped with a private balcony overlooking the valley below and the forest beyond. A small dining table, covered with white linens, was topped with fresh flowers and an assortment of delightful petit fours. In the bedroom, the king-sized bed with its feathery white comforter was so warm and cozy it was impossible to resist even in the afternoon.

Hotel Bareiss, Gartenbuhlweg 14, about $333 to $630; www.bareiss.com

Beechwood St. detour coming

Greenbush work to get underway

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Beginning next week, Greenbush construction will affect travel in Cohasset. Work will begin at the Beechwood Street grade crossing, which means the road will be closed to through traffic between Rte. 3A and South Main Street for roughly one month.

While updating selectmen Tuesday on the various Greenbush projects underway or about to begin around town, Greenbush liaisons Tom Gruber and Mark Brennan told the board about Beechwood, adding they had only recently been informed of the closing.

"Lots of people use Beechwood as a cut-through. They won't be able to do that for about a month," said Brennan. Fortunately, there will not be any major construction going on in North Scituate during the time of the closure, which leaves either South Main Street to North Scituate or Pond Street as alternate ways to reach Rte. 3A.

During the closure, "They (MBTA) will be building the railroad bed, laying the infrastructure for the gates, and putting the rails in," said Gruber.

"Lots of people use Beechwood as a cut-through. They won't be able to do that for about a month."

— Mark Brennan, Greenbush co-liaison

While median barriers for the crossing will depend on the driveway configuration to be determined with the condominiums at 39 Beechwood St., and the gates themselves may not be installed, "It will essentially be complete," he said.

Police chief contract inked

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Police Chief James Hussey's contract has been signed, making his post a permanent one for the next three years.

Hussey, a Norwood resident, came on board last June, replacing the retiring Chief Robert Jackson. Jackson had a rough year at the helm of the department which was riddled with controversy. Hussey, with a background in mediation as well as 28 years on the Boston Police Department, seemed to be the perfect person to take over the position.

Hussey was hired on a one-year interim basis, but was asked to stay on permanently this spring. He signed his contract May 18.

"When I first came here, I knew one year wasn't going to be long enough to do what I felt needed to be done."

— Police Chief James Hussey

"When I first came here, I knew one year wasn't going to be long enough to do what I felt needed to be done," said Hussey, adding any chief would say the same when coming into a new department. With a vision to bring back community policing to Cohasset, Hussey is glad to have the extra time.

One of his goals moving forward is to continue building bridges with the community — especially the town's youth.

"We're doing OK, but there's a lot of room for improvement," he said. "I would like to see us build on what we've built so far, and continue to work closely with parents and other concerned adults in the community."

Moving forward, Hussey said he would like to see the position which was cut from this year's budget reinstated. That would allow one department member to be able to really focus on working with the town's youth.

Hussey said in the year he has been on board, he has seen a tremendous change in the way

Local families who have a loved one with Alzheimer's Disease will soon be able to breathe a little easier.

The new technology — that can also be used for children with autism or Down Syndrome — comes in the form of a watch-like bracelet equipped with a radio transmitter that can track someone who has wandered off.

Cohasset has joined other Norfolk County towns in adopting the program, dubbed Project Lifesaver, with an important difference. Cohasset will be only one of three towns – joining Millis and Weymouth – to have its own tracking device that could save valuable time in a search.

While a team would still be dispatched from the Sheriff's Office, trained Cohasset officers could begin searching for the missing person within minutes using the lunch-box size, mobile tracking device which is equipped with an antenna to pick up the signal from the wristband.

"It's important to get started as soon as possible," explains William Knight, Ph.D., who heads the program for the sheriff's office. "The device tracks from three-quarters of a mile to a mile on the ground."

The police department purchased the $3,100 tracking device with a grant from Pilgrim Cooperative Bank.

Chief James Hussey said he was waiting to hear about potentially receiving money from a Community Policing grant to train roughly one-half the department. "I'd like to have people on each shift trained to use the transmitter," he said.

Hussey noted it could take the Sheriff's Department upwards of 30 minutes to get to Cohasset.

"With our own transmitter, we can get started right away," he said. "We are very grateful to Frank Campbell and Pilgrim Cooperative Bank for helping bring this technology to the town."

Campbell, who is president and CEO of Pilgrim Cooperative, also sits on the board of South Shore Elder Services.

"Dr. Knight gave a presentation to South Shore Elder Services on the program," recalled Campbell. "I brought it to the board of directors (at the bank) who were really excited about the project.

Four-way stop OK'ed for Forest Ave. intersection

Wadleigh Park parking approved

By Samantha Brown

Beach-goers will soon have a new place to park when going to Black Rock Beach. The right-of-way at Wadleigh Park, located at the intersection of Forest Avenue Extension and Jerusalem Road, will become a one-way street with roughly eight painted parking spaces.

The intersection of Jerusalem Road, Forest Avenue, and Atlantic Avenue will change very soon.

Selectmen approved installing a new stop sign at the intersection, which will affect those traveling on Forest Avenue toward Black Rock Beach and Hull, making the intersection a four-way stop. In addition, there will soon be parking for beach-goers on one side of Wadleigh Park.

"If we're promoting pedestrian access," it makes sense to implement a stop sign which will slow down traffic, said Town Manager Bill Griffin.

The changers are the result of a parking ban on Spindrift Lane. Residents of the private way, located off Forest Avenue, petitioned selectmen to install a no parking sign on their street, as it was being used for parking by both residents and out-of-towners. Residents of the street said they had witnessed teenagers parking their cars and leaving them on the street to go drink alcohol on Black Rock Beach, and leaving empty beer cans behind when they left. In addition, altercations had broken out between those fighting for parking spots on the street.

To make up for the parking lost on Spindrift Lane, Griffin worked with the police and fire departments as well as the Department of Public Works to come up with alternate sites for beach parking. It had been suggested at a previous meeting that the "alley" or right-of-way at Wadleigh Park — the grassy, triangular area between the Forest Avenue Extension and Jerusalem Road fork in the road — could be used to accommodate cars. Parking would be allowed only for cars with a town beach sticker.

Selectmen are responsible for voting to change parking in the area. Griffin recommended making the right-of-way through the park as a one-way street with Hull-side access. This will allow the fire trucks from Hull to more easily access Jerusalem Road. Roughly eight parking spaces would then be painted along one side of the right-of-way. A white line would be painted roughly eight feet from the edge of the pavement to define the parking area. Signage will be posted along the right-of-way to clearly point out parking is only allowed from dawn until dusk.

Griffin said in speaking with Police Chief James Hussey, he suggested if the area is going to be made more conducive for pedestrians with the additional beach parking, perhaps there should be a stop sign installed at the bottom of Forest Avenue. Currently, motorists coming down the hill toward the intersection travel much too fast, which would be dangerous for residents crossing Forest Avenue Extension to use the beach.

"If we are going to encourage people to park, and create more pedestrian traffic, it makes sense," to add a stop sign to the intersection said Hussey in an interview after the meeting. He said while residents had expressed concern over motorists being able to stop in the winter with slippery conditions, hopefully, the town will be able to take care of any slippery roads before it becomes an issue. In his opinion, having the stop sign is a great way to get people to slow down.

The intersection used to be a two-way stop, with Forest Avenue and Forest Avenue Extension both being through ways. In a memo sent from Hussey to Griffin, Hussey states it is his understanding the third stop sign was added in the spring of 2003, based on conversations with Carl Sestito of the DPW and Christy Tarantino of the Cohasset Police Department.

Hussey said he reviewed the accident data from the intersection and found when there were only two stop signs at the intersection, there were four accidents recorded — two of which involved only one vehicle. After the third sign was added, there were five accidents recorded, three of which were one-vehicle accidents. Therefore, adding a stop sign at the intersection did not reduce the number of accidents.

Hussey's memo also stated Sergeant William Quigley conducted a traffic volume study during the morning and evening commute on June 23, 2005. "He made the general observation that vehicles coming down the hill on Forest Avenue are going too fast for approaching an intersection," Hussey wrote.

Based on the fact that Wadleigh Park will be used for parking, "I recommend we add a fourth stop sign for this intersection. The parking near this intersection will increase pedestrian traffic. I believe the fourth stop sign will help impact vehicles speeding on Forest Avenue, causing them to slow, knowing there is a stop sign ahead."

The selectmen passed both changes unanimously.

The intersection of Jerusalem Road, Forest Avenue, and Atlantic Avenue will soon become a four-way stop. Cars traveling on Forest Avenue toward Hull will now be required to stop at the bottom of the hill.

Local developers could have leg up on Cook competition

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Residents seem to want a local developer to build on the Cook Estate. If opinions voiced during the public comment portion of Tuesday's selectmen's meeting are a gauge, either Cohasset Associates or Deer Hill Partners will be the residents' choice to develop the Sohier Street site.

"Two bidders live here in town and they'll still be here."

— Richard Brooks, 68 Nichols Road

Selectmen are currently sorting through three proposals, which includes a second proposal for senior housing from Northland Residential. Northland, a Burlington, Mass.-based company, was chosen to develop the parcel during the first round of bidding and had worked with the town for more than one year to bring the project to fruition. However, wastewater issues required building a scaled-back version of the project. With such a substantial change, the project needed to be put back out to bid to ensure a fair process. New bids were opened July 15.

Richard Brooks, 68 Nichols Road, said in his opinion, the town has been given a second chance to build on the Cook site, and this time around a local developer should be chosen.

"Two bidders live here in town and they'll still be here" once the project is complete, he said. "In my 50 years of development experience, I'd pick one of those two."

Peter Wood, 77 Summer St., agreed, and said in his opinion, the most advantageous proposal for the town is the one submitted by Cohasset resident and president of Cohasset Associates, Donald Staszko.

"I think it would be good for the town to go with Cohasset Associates. They're local, we all know who they are, and they've done a good job. Their bid is more beneficial to the town," he said. "It has the same number of units as Northland, with more rental units," he said, adding it also has a greater percentage of affordable housing and a higher bid price, which means a higher profit for the town.

Water commission chairman Glenn Pratt said he believes it is important for the town to consider the fact Cohasset Associates has land that abuts the Cook property. With the wastewater disposal issues the site has had, the extra land would give the developer some room to solve any problems that could arise, he said.

Joe Nedrow, 21 Fairoaks Lane, who is chairman of the senior housing committee, said one of the features his committee liked best about building senior housing on the Cook Estate, was its proximity to shopping. He said if Cohasset Associates is chosen, access to the shops would be readily accessible through Staszko's abutting land. However, he said all three bid proposals have positives. "We are delighted you have a choice to create viable senior housing in town," he said.

The only true issue Nedrow wondered about, is the fact the Deer Hill Partners project does not have a rental component, as all 56 units will be for sale. The units would be affordable, moderate, and market rate ownership housing.

"One (proposal) suggested there was no need for rental housing and that's true for 55 to 75 year olds," Nedrow said, but added estate planners would likely tell a 75-year-old couple to consider renting especially if children do not live nearby. He said renting takes away the burden for children to have to dispose of a home when the parents pass away.

In addition, he said rental properties create a presence on site as they will be managed by an outside company. He pointed out mixing the rental and ownership units is also a priority of the senior housing committee.

Selectman Rob Spofford asked Nedrow if he was familiar with the Cedarmere development, which is already in the process of clearing to construct 105-units of mixed income senior housing off Beechwood Street. Spofford said the development will have upscale condominiums, but will also provide affordable rental units.

"Is there a need to have that many senior rentals in the community at large?" asked Spofford, referring to the combined rentals Cedarmere and one of the other developments would provide. He also asked whether there is a specific number of rental units the senior housing committee would like to see built in town.

While Nedrow said a specific number has not been decided, he knows from neighboring towns rental housing for seniors is a hot commodity. The Villages at Duxbury has a very long waiting list for rentals, he said.

Libby Zotos, who is also a member of the senior housing committee, said until last week, she had shared Nedrow's belief that rental housing was the preference, but after hearing the proposals, was swayed by the Deer Hill Partners project.

"Moderate income ownership is a very good concept," she said, adding many people in Cohasset won't qualify for affordable housing due to the amount of money they would receive from the sale of the family home. However, many will not have the kind of funding necessary to purchase the upscale condominiums at Cedarmere. "It's the middle income we really have to consider here," she said.

There were features of the Cohasset Associates proposal Zotos liked as well. She said the concept of having two rental buildings, each with 12 units, makes sense to her because they are smaller. Both Northland Residential and Deer Hill Partners submitted proposals with a central large building for apartments. However, she said she thought the Cohasset Associates development as a whole was too dense with too many duplexes and triplexes.

"I liked the Deer Hill Partners concept of ownership, but not the 31 units in one building. That's too many," she said.

Spofford also asked Zotos whether she thought there were enough rentals in town with the upcoming Cedarmere project.

"With the rentals at Cedarmere, the affordable portion will be taken care of," she said.

Roger Hill, 19A Highland Ave., said in his opinion, the Deer Hill proposal is the way to go. With $700,000 as its highest purchase price, he said he believes the project keeps costs down. He said it is the perfect mix for seniors who are trying to downsize and decrease their bills.

Background on Cook Estate process

After two hours of discussion, voters at the November 2003 Annual Town Meeting approved the purchase of the Cook land, located on Sohier Street, for $4.5 million, to be marketed to developers with the town's adjacent land, with the intention of selling the parcels together for a profit. However, problems arose with wastewater disposal and plans changed.

Northland Residential was awarded the original bid on the project in March 2004, and soil tests conducted soon after determined wastewater from 95-units of housing - the maximum number of units the original Request For Proposals asked for - could not be handled on site and other options would need to be looked into. The RFP dictated what the town would like to see built on the site.

Northland spent a good deal of money and put in countless man hours helping the town come up with wastewater solutions. Soil testing was done on site, holes were dug at both the South Shore Music Circus and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library to determine whether off-site leaching fields would be a possibility at either location, and the possibility of municipal sewer was also pursued. However, in the end, the only alternative found was to downsize the project, as fewer units would generate a smaller amount of wastewater, which could be accommodated on site. With the change in scope of the project, the board of selectmen said it would be necessary to begin a new bid process pursuant to Massachusetts procurement laws.

Advertising for the new RFP began June 15, and final bids were due July 15. Developers presented their plans before the board Monday, Aug. 1. Cohasset Associates bid $5.15 million for 65 total units, Deer Hill partners bid $4.9 million for 56 units, and Northland Residential bid $5 million for 65 units. The board of selectmen will meet again Tuesday, Aug. 16 at 7 to discuss the proposals.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said there is still time for residents to submit feedback on the three Cook Estate housing proposals, which he will then forward on to the board of selectmen. Residents who wish to do so may send comments in writing to Griffin at Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., or via e-mail at wgriffin@townofcohasset.org. Residents may also call the office with comments or questions at (781) 383-4105. The board will meet again Tuesday, Aug. 16 at 7 p.m.
